matter of the Ravens needing to adapt. The NFL, determined to get its 256-game regular season played before commencing with a postseason slated to culminate with Super Bowl LV on Feb. 7 in Tampa, Florida, didn't reschedule Ravens-Steelers for a Week 18 in its first move.

It opted to rearrange the chairs for Week 12 while also pushing the scheduled Thursday nighter between the Ravens and Dallas Cowboys to a Monday afternoon slot in Week 13.

Hey, with about 30% of the regular season still ahead in December, the NFL may still opt to put games in a Week 18. With surging pandemic numbers across the nation, the coming weeks could wreak havoc on the NFL's schedule and, well, on the lives of millions of real people affected by the pandemic.

As for the Ravens, it could be worse. With Robert Griffin III poised to start at Heinz Field, at least they aren't "Denver Broncoed" and will have a quarterback.

And with several players possibly returning if reactivated from the COVID-19 list as "close contacts," the Ravens hope that they'll have a backup, too, if No. 3 quarterback Trace McSorley can make it back as expected.

The Broncos were clobbered by New Orleans on Sunday when Kendall Hinton was elevated from the practice squad to play quarterback as a complement to the Wildcat packages Denver heavily leaned on. Hinton, it should be noted, was an undrafted rookie receiver on the practice squad who last played quarterback in 2017 at Wake Forest.

Still, the Ravens have a link to the Broncos in the sense that their COVID-19 woes included a layer of self-infliction that they are paying for. Broncos coach Vic Fangio didn't mince words in expressing his disappointment in the actions of the three quarterbacks - Drew Lock, Brett Rypien and Blake Bortles - who apparently violated NFL pro-protocols after No. 3 quarterback Jeff Driskel tested positive for COVID-19 last Thursday.

The quarterbacks, ruled ineligible on Saturday as "close contacts" to Driskel, didn't consistently wear masks while at the Broncos headquarters as mandated by the strict protocols the league has instituted to mitigate spread of the coronavirus.

The message from the NFL is clear, if the fines and docked draft picks levied on individuals and teams in recent weeks were not enough: Dismiss the protocols as though they were some personal annoyance and your team will pay a price.

In the Ravens' case, the outbreak seemingly is linked to the actions of Saunders. Per multiple reports, he didn't wear a mask and cast aside the required contact tracing device.

Personal responsibility was always an obvious key to whether the NFL would be successful in pulling off a season in a pandemic. With more than 2,000 players across the league, though, it was easy to cast scrutiny on young, 20-something players needing to maintain discipline in their personal lifestyle choices.

The Ravens' outbreak, however, says something about who should be expected to lead by example.

Harbaugh was unavailable for comment on Monday. But I'm reminded of a conversation I had a few weeks ago with the Ravens' coach, who sounded all-in for following the letter of the NFL protocol law. For many weeks, the Ravens avoided a significant COVID-19 outbreak while Harbaugh's messaging struck the proper, responsible tone.

Now the coach needs to be asked whether Saunders will ever return to the team after his suspension, given his apparent contribution to the mess the Ravens find themselves in.

No, this was never going to be a season when NFL parity would carry the campaign. With the pandemic, bad breaks and inequities were always going to be part of the mix like never before.

It's pandemic football, which shows no mercy.

rely on one day of testing.

"You'd hope there would be an inclination to comply with public health recommendations and model good behavior because the rest of the country is watching," said Jennifer Nuzzo, a Senior Scholar at the Johns Hopkins Center for Health Security and associate professor of epidemiology. "My worry is they feel like using testing will guarantee safety of the players who test negative that day, but we've seen in other circumstances the folly of a test-only approach. They provide information but they don't ensure safety and sometimes that information is wrong."

Justin Lessler, also an associate professor of epidemiology at Johns Hopkins, said if an outbreak of the magnitude the Ravens are dealing with occurred at a different type of business - say, a restaurant or a bar - the state would "almost certainly step in and shut it down." But he also acknowledged that at this point the health risk is mostly from team to team and not as much the general public health interest.

But that could be a problem for the NFL, too.

"Certainly from the perspective of avoiding transmission, it's not the best idea (to play)," Lessler said.

"I think that they have very close contact and are breathing very hard, so if anyone is infected there's ample opportunity for spread in this situation.

"I do think, though, it's more a lot of this is driven by the virus being widespread in the community and the NFL isn't doing any sort of bubble or anything like that to try to really protect the players, and as long as you do that it's

The Ravens' game against the Steelers, originally set for Thanksgiving, has been pushed back again, now to Wednesday. MITCHELL LAYTON/USA TODAY SPORTS very hard to keep the virus out of that community."

In all of his public comments when teams have positive tests, NFL chief medical officer Dr. Allen Sills has said that games will be played when there's no longer evidence of ongoing transmission within a team.

But what troubles Grabowski is that in the Ravens' situation, one day of negative tests does not establish that evidence when you have had that many infections and eight consecutive days of at least one person testing positive.

"I can't understand why they're continuing to press forward and I can't understand why they're putting the health at risk as well as the local community," she said. "It just makes no sense. Even from a financial perspective I can't see how ultimately having huge outbreaks among two of the NFL's best teams is good for anybody in the long run.

"So I think it makes sense to contain outbreaks and the NFL needs to think about doing something different. What they're doing to prevent transmission isn't working, and they should probably re-evaluate their plans.

"I think they need to do a deep dive into where things are going wrong."

And it's only going to get harder given the nationwide trends and the light at the end of the tunnel coming into view for many NFL players, particularly those on teams that are not going to make the playoffs, who have had to be extremely careful for months and months about where they go and who they are around.

But the Ravens' situation is particularly problematic given the large number of people affected and the clear evidence that they haven't broken the chain of transmission.

We all know why the NFL wants them to play on Wednesday. It's just as obvious, though, that they shouldn't.

Proposer's complete proposal must be submitted through the Sourcewell Procurement Portal no later than the date and time specified in the Solicitation Schedule. Any other form of proposal submission, whether electronic, paper, or otherwise, will not be considered by Sourcewell. Only complete proposals that are timely submitted through the Sourcewell Procurement Portal will be considered. Late proposals will not be considered. It is the Proposer's sole responsibility to ensure that the proposal is received on time.

All proposals must be received through the Sourcewell Procurement Portal no later than the Proposal Due Date and time noted in the Solicitation Schedule above. It is recommended that Proposers allow sufficient time to upload the proposal and to resolve any issues that may arise. The closing time and date is determined by the Sourcewell Procurement Portal web clock.

In the event of problems with the Sourcewell Procurement Portal, follow the instructions for technical support posted in the portal. It may take up to twenty-four (24) hours to respond to certain issues.

Upon successful submission of a proposal, the Portal will automatically generate a confirmation email to the Proposer. If the Proposer does not receive a confirmation email, contact Sourcewell's support provider at support@bidsandtenders.ca.

To ensure receipt of the latest information and updates via email regarding this solicitation, or if the Proposer has obtained this solicitation document from a third party, the onus is on the Proposer to create a Sourcewell Procurement Portal Vendor Account and register for this solicitation opportunity.

All proposals must be acknowledged digitally by an authorized representative of the Proposer attesting that the information contained in the proposal is true and accurate. By submitting a proposal, Proposer warrants that the information provided is true, correct, and reliable for purposes of evaluation for potential contract award. The submission of inaccurate, misleading, or false information is grounds for disqualification from a contract award and may subject the Proposer to remedies available by law.
