Soto offers no hints about post-2024 plans

Bob Nightengale
USA TODAY

Juan Soto, the New York Yankees' newest prized possession, didn't mind the questions.

Certainly, he welcomed everyone's interest.

He respects the curiosity.

But no, he did not drop a single hint on Tuesday, share any thoughts, or come close to suggesting his stay in New York will last longer than a year.

He seemed genuinely excited to be with the Bronx Bombers, saying it was surreal to put on a Yankee cap before starting his 30-minute zoom call, but kept every last thought of his future strictly to himself.

"Any contract stuff," Soto said, "they know where to call, who to talk to. I'm just here to play baseball ..."

"My mindset is coming here to play baseball and try to win a championship."

While agent Scott Boras was also on the call, he remained silent.

But let's be honest. There's a better chance of the Kansas City Royals and Pittsburgh Pirates meeting in the 2024 World Series than Soto signing an extension before he hits free agency.

The Yankees' advantage now is that they have the next 10 months to prove to Soto this is the place he wants to play for perhaps the rest of his professional baseball career.

And, if they want him, they're certainly going to have to pay him.

Soto, who already turned down a deferred 15-year, $440 million contract extension two years ago from the Washington Nationals, is determined to become the richest baseball player in history.

Certainly, he wants to crack the $500 million barrier and break Shohei Ohtani's record with the Los Angeles Dodgers. Ohtani signed a 10-year, $700 million contract with the Dodgers; but with $680 million deferred, the contract is worth about $460 million, MLB officials say.

But while Ohtani is baseball's greatest two-way player, and twice has been a unanimous MVP, Soto is a three-time All-Star and four-time Silver Slugger

Juan Soto had a .275 batting average with 35 home runs and 109 runs batted in for the Padres in 2023. DARREN YAMASHITA/USA TODAY SPORTS but has never won the award. He twice finished in the top five, including second in 2021, his last full season with the Nationals.

He was on a loaded San Diego Padres team, surrounded by Manny Machado, Xander Bogaerts and Fernando Tatis, but the team never came close to winning the division during his stay and missed postseason play in 2023.

Now, he's on a team with former MVPs and home run champions Aaron Judge and Giancarlo Stanton, with Judge expected to play in center field and Soto in left or right field.

"It's going to be amazing," said Soto, who was on the call from his home in Miami. "It's going to be really fun. I'm going to be more than excited to share the field with him. He seems like a great guy. One of the guys that reached out to me when I got traded."

"It's going to be fun to see him play, hitting and play the outfield. I'll try to pick his mind when I'm there, and try to enjoy the moment while I'm there."

The Yankees didn't trade five players to the Padres for Soto and outfielder Trent Grisham just to help Soto's free agent stock. They believe he could be the missing piece on a team that finished 25th in runs last season and missed the playoffs.

"We understand that he's a free agent at the end of this term, and we understand that it's a possible short-term situation," Yankees general manager Brian Cashman said last week. "I just know he's just going to make our team significantly better."

Soto, who was playing Nintendo with friends when he got the news of the trade, wasn't exactly throwing his joy stick up in the air in excitement. He wanted to stay in San Diego for at least one more year. He loved playing with the Padres and believed that this year was a fluke, believing they could bounce back and take control of the division.

He will never know.

All that matters now, at least in the Bronx, is that he gets the Yankees back to being the Yankees, the beast of the AL East.

This is the bat the Yankees badly need for a sagging offense, with an outfield that produced only a 2.9 WAR, the sixth weakest in baseball. Soto, with his career .946 OPS, should remedy that, along with the acquisition of outfielder Alex Verdugo from the Boston Red Sox.

While the short porch in right field at Yankee Stadium is a left-handed hitter's dream, letting folks imagine they are going to have another rendition of Judge, Soto wants everyone to calm down. Simply, he is not a pull hitter. He hit 196 balls into the air last season, according to Statcast, and just 49 balls (25%) were hit to right field.

He is not going to change his swing just because he'll be playing 81 games at Yankee Stadium.

"We all know there's a really short porch there, and it's got to be on your mind," Soto said. "But definitely, I'm going to try to stay in the same approach I've been doing. That's what has taken me all the way to where I am right now, so there's no reason to change anything."

Soto, who played left field this past season for the Padres, says it doesn't matter whether he plays left field or right field. He prefers to hit third, which would be ideal to protect Judge, but wherever the Yankees want to put him in the order, he's fine.

Soto, with uncles and friends who live in New York, knows there will be distractions. This is New York, not San Diego or Washington. He will constantly be asked about free agency wherever he goes.

And he will consistently provide no clues.

"I mean, I've been doing it for six years," he said. "I think it's not going to be that hard, because I have one of the best agents in the league. So, I put everything on him and let him do his magic."

Playing in New York can be grueling on the psyche. It can chew up and spit out the weak. But it also can provide the ultimate high. And now Soto will be able to play in front of a Dominican community, where he'll be worshipped.

"It's definitely just a great vibe, a great feeling to be playing in New York and in that stadium," Soto said. "It's going to be really fun to see how much energy they bring to the ballpark."

The way Soto envisions it, he'll have a monster season, the Yankees will flourish, and they'll be playing through late October, all the way until November.

"In a perfect season," he said, "we'll win a championship."

Four pitchers among five intriguing players on the market

Bob Nightengale
Columnist
USA TODAY

There is no hard-and-fast deadline. No one is in any particular hurry.

Besides, the two biggest blockbuster moves have already been made with Shohei Ohtani traveling up the road to the Los Angeles Dodgers and Juan Soto heading 3,000 miles away to the New York Yankees.

Really, what's the rush?

Well, the holidays and New Year's is around the corner. Teams want to be able to market their new presents for their season ticket holders.

The earlier, the better.

Here are the top five most intriguing players on the marketplace:

Yoshinobu Yamamoto

Is there anyone who's not trying to sign this guy?

Let's see, the New York Mets traveled halfway across the world to see him. The San Francisco Giants already had a visit. The Yankees front office came to see him Monday. The Dodgers hosted him Tuesday. The Boston Red Sox and Toronto Blue Jays are next on the dock. He is the anti-Ohtani.

This guy loves the spotlight. He adores being the center of attention. He embraces the brightest lights. He's into the latest fashion.

He's also the best pitcher on the marketplace, winning three consecutive Sawamura Awards (Japan's version of the Cy Young) and has earned Pacific League MVP honors each of the past three seasons.

And, oh, yeah, he's 25.

Yamamoto is going to receive at least $300 million on the market, with the Yankees, Dodgers, Mets and Giants all expected to be in a bidding war.

Prediction: Yankees.

Cody Bellinger

It's an awfully weak class of position players and Bellinger is easily the best. He reestablished his free agent value after two lousy seasons with the Dodgers, becoming the Cubs' best player in 2023. He went from striking out 27.3% of the time in 2022 to a career-best 15.6% while hitting .307 with 26 homers and 97 RBI.

Bellinger, 28, still plays fabulous defense in center field, is an elite first baseman and has become one of the best two-strike hitters in the game.

He looked like he'd be a natural fit for the Giants, only for them to sign Korean star center fielder Jung Hoo Lee instead to a six-year, $113 million contract.

Bellinger's cost will be much higher. He's seeking a 10-year, $250 million contract, according to several team officials, and certainly wants to crack the $200 million barrier.

The Giants need more help, but the outfield and first base appear to be set.

This leaves a two-way battle between the Cubs and Toronto Blue Jays for the former MVP.

Prediction: Blue Jays

Blake Snell

The man is a two-time Cy Young winner who absolutely dominated the National League last season. The concern is that Snell, 31, has pitched more than 109 innings just twice and has never pitched more than 180.

Some teams fear that he would put too much stress on their bullpen, lasting into the sixth inning just three times last year, while others wonder if he could handle the stress of pitching in a big market.

Prediction: Giants.

Dylan Cease

Tyler Glasnow is expected to be first marquee pitcher traded, with talks between the Tampa Bay Rays and Dodgers hot and heavy.

Yet the most prized pitcher is Cease of the Chicago White Sox, who has two years left of control. While Glasnow is scheduled to earn $25 million in 2024, Cease isn't expected to earn that much in his next two seasons of arbitration.

Cease struggled this year, along with every other White Sox player, going 7-9 with a 4.58 ERA. Yet two seasons ago, he finished second in the AL Cy Young race, going 14-7 with a 2.22 ERA and 227 strikeouts in 184 innings.

The beauty of Cease is that he's not a rental. You have him for two more seasons.

The White Sox are smart waiting for the hysteria to end over Yamamoto before trading Cease to the higher bidder.

Prediction: Atlanta

Josh Hader

There's not a reliever on the free agent or trade market in the same stratosphere as Hader, a five-time All-Star who has been the game's best reliever for years.

The trouble is that his price tag is in a different stratosphere than the rest, too, seeking to eclipse Edwin Diaz's five-year, $102 million contract with the Mets.

The Phillies would seem to be a natural fit, but they have no interest. The Texas Rangers could badly use him but say they don't have the cash. It could leave Hader falling in the Dodgers' lap.

Prediction: Dodgers
