Showalter now 4-time top manager

Andrew Tredinnick

NorthJersey.com | USA TODAY Network

When Buck Showalter put a New York Mets cap on his head for the first time in December 2021, his opening remarks voiced his intentions to put a product on the field that would make the fans proud.

After Showalter's opening season leading the Mets, he helped morph the team's identity from playoff outsiders to World Series contenders.

In the fifth stop in his managerial career, Showalter brought an ability to connect with his players and coaching staff, a drive to compete and a willingness to adapt to a new generation of baseball. Showalter made quite the opening impression, helping the Mets finish 101-61 to become the first Mets manager in history to help the team eclipse the 100-win mark in his first season as manager. On Tuesday night, Showalter was named the National League's Manager of the Year by the Baseball Writers' Association of America.

He is the first Mets manager to win the award since it was first given out in 1983.

"This is a well-deserved honor," owner Steve Cohen said in a statement. "There is no doubt Buck had the players' respect and they played hard for him. He is one of the sharpest minds in the game and he builds a winning culture."

The Mets made a 24-win improvement under Showalter from the 2021 season when they finished 77-85, which was the second-best win increase in MLB behind the Orioles.

It is the fourth time Showalter has been selected as the manager of the year across his 21 seasons. He won the award with three teams - Yankees (1994), Rangers (2004) and Orioles (2018) - in the American League. He joins Bobby Cox and Tony La Russa as the only managers to win four manager of the year awards.

"Buck poured every ounce of himself into making the Mets better on a daily basis," general manager Billy Eppler said in a statement. "I'm thrilled the voters recognized what I got to witness every day this season."

Here is what led Showalter to the recognition:

The challenges

When Showalter entered the clubhouse for the first time, lofty expectations were there after a strong free agent haul that brought Max Scherzer, Starling Marte and Chris Bassitt, among others, on board.

But a 99-day lockout meant Showalter's introduction to the team and acclimation period was much different with an abbreviated spring training.

Buck Showalter is the first Mets skipper to win the NL Manager of the Year award.

BRAD PENNER/USA TODAY SPORTS

Then, on the eve of the season, came the news of Jacob deGrom's extended absence following a stress reaction in his right shoulder blade. Despite long-term injuries to deGrom and Scherzer in the opening two months of the season, the Mets hit the ground running, won nine of their opening 10 series and opened up a 10.5-game lead in the NL East after the opening two months.

Whenever adversity struck throughout the season, he delivered his trademark line: "No one cares about your problems. They're glad you have them." Throughout the season, the Mets never lost more than three games in a row while piecing together a season-best seven-game winning streak in July and August along with three other six-game streaks. The NL East pennant chase captivated baseball fans, with the Mets and Braves each winning 101 games but the latter ultimately grabbing the crown with the tiebreaker.

Showalter is the fifth manager in MLB history to have 100-win seasons with multiple clubs.

Despite being hit a major league-record 112 times, the Mets often kept the steady discipline that was molded by Showalter.

Measuring up

Showalter received the distinction ahead of fellow NL finalists Brian Snitker of the Braves and Dave Roberts of the Dodgers.

Snitker had a high bar coming into the season after helping the Braves make a Cinderella run to the franchise's fourth World Series title in 2021. Last season, the Braves narrowly made the playoffs with 88 wins, and this season, Snitker helped the team make a 13-win improvement and grab the NL East for a fifth straight season.

Snitker helped several players make impressive leaps in 2022, including pitcher Kyle Wright who led the league with 21 wins, and Rookie of the Year Michael Harris and rookie Spencer Strider, who both showcased superstar potential in their first seasons.

Roberts, meanwhile, helped the Dodgers claim the best record in baseball at 111-51. Those wins matched Cleveland in 1954 for the fourth-most victories in major league history.

While leading the Dodgers, Roberts also has among the highest expectations of any manager. The Dodgers have reached the playoffs in 10 straight seasons, including nine division crowns and three trips to the World Series.

For Showalter, the Mets' success was uncharted over the last two decades. It was the first time that the team had won 100 games since 1988 and the first time that they had reached the playoffs since 2016.

Francona wins 3rd AL manager award

Ryan Lewis

Akron (Ohio) Beacon Journal
USA TODAY Network

Cleveland Guardians manager Terry Francona's 2022 season included a celebratory headbutt from Josh Naylor after a walk-of home run. It also now includes recognition as the American League's best manager.

Francona was named as the American League's Manager of the Year on Tuesday night, as voted upon by members of the Baseball Writers' Association of America.

Baltimore Orioles manager Brandon Hyde (finished second) and Seattle Mariners manager Scott Servais (third) were the other finalists. Francona received 17 of the 30 first-place votes.

It is Francona's third manager of the year win, along with the 2013 (his first in Cleveland) and 2016 seasons. He was also the runner-up in 2017.

The 2022 Guardians were one of the biggest surprises around baseball, beating most projections by about 15 wins to reclaim the American League Central title by double-digit games. The 92 victories were a 12-win improvement from 2021, which was the first in the Francona era (since 2013) that Cleveland had a losing record.

The 2022 season was also Francona's first in which he was able to get through the entire year without major health issues since 2019. He had his 2020 and 2021 seasons cut short due to needed procedures to address several health issues, including a gastrointestinal issue that had him at one point in the ICU and then hip and toe procedures last season. Francona said in October that he would be returning for the 2023 season.

Francona also said the youthful group in the clubhouse that beat the Tampa Bay Rays in the AL wild-card series and then took the New York Yankees to Game 5 in the AL division series energized him.

It could be argued that this was Francona's best managerial job during the regular season, as the Guardians had the league's youngest roster, one that was even more youthful than Triple-A teams. The Guardians became only the second club in more than 50 years to win their division as the youngest team in baseball and the first since the 1986 New York Mets.

Mariners acquire All-Star OF from Jays

Steve Gardner

USA TODAY

The Seattle Mariners have acquired All-Star outfielder Teoscar Hernandez from the Toronto Blue Jays, Mariners general manager Jerry Dipoto announced Wednesday.

Hernandez, 30, hit .267 with 25 home runs for Toronto last season, though those numbers were down from his All-Star campaign the previous year (.296, 32 HRs, 116 RBI), when he won his second consecutive American League Silver Slugger award.

"We began our offseason with the intent to add impact and length to our lineup," Dipoto said.

"In adding Teoscar to an already solid foundation, we feel we've become a far more dangerous offensive club."

The Mariners finished in the middle of the pack offensively in 2021, so Hernandez will give them a much-needed power bat in the middle of their lineup to complement AL rookie of the year Julio Rodriguez and 2022 All-Star first baseman Ty France.

After posting a 90-72 record, the Mariners are coming off their first postseason appearance since the 2001 season, ending the longest drought in the four major North American professional sports. They swept the Blue Jays in their wild-card playoff series before losing to the eventual World Series champion Houston Astros in the divisional playoffs.

Seattle will send reliever Erik Swanson (3-2, 1.68 ERA in 2022) and left-handed pitching prospect Adam Macko to Toronto in the deal.
