Affleck's 'Air' earns rarefied raves at SXSW

Kim Willis
USA TODAY

Ben Affleck's latest movie about hoop dreams, "Air," received a rave reception Saturday at South by Southwest.

First reactions were glowing for the film, which tells the backstory of how then-rookie Michael Jordan partnered with Nike on his revolutionary Air Jordan shoe line. Affleck directs, produces and stars as Nike CEO Phil Knight.

"It was the most joyful professional experience," Affleck told the Austin American-Statesman, part of the USA TODAY Network, on the red carpet before the film was unveiled on the Austin festival's closing night. "There is a certain amount of magic, and maybe it's Michael Jordan, you know. My whole life, I thought, as a director, if I could have Viola Davis in my movie, then I really will have made it."

Ben Affleck, Matt Damon reunite on the SXSW red carpet

The SXSW premiere reunited Affleck with his friend (and "Good Will Hunting" co-star and co-writer) Matt Damon, who stars as Sonny Vaccaro, the Nike executive who persuades Knight to give Air Jordan a shot. They were joined on the red carpet by Davis and her husband Julius Tennon (who play Jordan's parents Deloris and James Jordan) and castmates Jason Bateman, Chris Tucker and Chris Messina.

"She was a generation where your kids are your dreams," Davis said of Deloris Jordan. For years in the Black community, "people weren't allowed to dream because we weren't given any opportunities. And so this was a woman who did believe in education, but she believed in tapping into that opportunity that her son had in playing with the NBA and getting the utmost for this extraordinary human being."

What critics are saying about Affleck's movie 'Air'

Reaction was overwhelmingly positive, both on social media and in movie reviews:

"Entertaining, hilarious, hopeful, and the best movie of the year so far," The Hollywood Handle tweeted.

"The film applies – wonderfully – the poetic reverence usually reserved for portraying the sport in these types of dramas to the process of designing a shoe," arts and culture critic Lovia Gyarkye wrote in her The Hollywood Reporter review. "Not a slam dunk, but scores enough points."

Variety critic Peter Debruge praised the film's casting of Davis: "The smartest thing Affleck could have done, as the EGOT winner is to acting what Jordan is to sports: Her strength inspires, and she can move us to tears while making it look easy," he wrote in his review.

"Affleck & Damon's chemistry is as alive as ever. Viola is simply great. Ben is shaping into a PHENOMENAL director," Reel Movie Junkie tweeted.

"The script for AIR is just so damned good," SXSW programmer Peter Hall tweeted.

"It's remarkable to see that stellar cast make every exchange sing, and Affleck's impeccable direction making sure not a single moment or role gets lost or underserved."

"A rousing, feel-good crowd-pleaser about risk, trust, confidence & family!" tweeted film critic Scott Mantz of MovieMantz.com.

"Air" arrives in theaters April 5 and premieres later on Amazon Prime Video.

HEALTH AND WELLNESS

Spring brings memories of my dad

David Oliver
USA TODAY

My dad died last spring. Two months after a doctor diagnosed him with a fatal, neurodegenerative prion disease.

I lost those two months, and I can't find them.

They're not in the photos on my phone. They're not in my text messages. They're not in my dad's memorabilia under my bed, on my dresser, in my closet. They're not on the train, not in the car.

They're lost in time. In space. They're dandelions, little white specks floating across the grass.

Spring is a time of rebirth, of resurgence, of flowers in bloom and pollen and sneezes. A time of change toward something brighter, warmer. This is the season we spring forward.

But last spring, I fell back. I lurched, I crumbled, I screamed and no sound left my voice. I simply sat on the edge of a cliff, waiting, waiting, waiting for the inevitable event to happen, the moment my dad would stop suffering, and I could breathe again.

It started with eight words in a text message that changed my life forever.

"Please give me a call when you can." March 28, 2022 at 4:03 p.m. When my mom told me that something was wrong with my dad, Dr. Mark Oliver, of Randolph, New Jersey. That he had trouble speaking. Aphasia. (Yes, what actor Bruce Willis was initially diagnosed with just days later. Goosebumps crawled up my arm then and now.)

"I'm going for a drive" became "I'm going for a car." Would he continue practicing medicine? Was his brain working normally? Was it holding memories?

We learned a few weeks later he had the "rapidly progressive and always fatal" Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease. Over the course of seven weeks, between March and May, his body fell apart. He could walk the dog until he was gone longer than expected. He could empty the dishwasher until he couldn't pick up a fork. He could brush his teeth until he forgot how. He could get into bed until he couldn't lift up his own body.

He stopped functioning. Slowly then suddenly. Suddenly then slowly. All because of a single protein that we all have – the prion protein – that is normally not a problem. Until it misfolds.

"It's able to sort of template this domino effect of misfolding of (prion) molecules across the brain," Sonia Vallabh told me last year. I spoke to her and her husband Eric Minikel, both scientists studying prion diseases, about a month after my dad died. They're researchers familiar with the disease all too well, because Vallabh inherited a prion disease-causing gene.

"It has no DNA, it has no RNA. It's just protein," my dad's neurologist and friend Dr. Mark Diamond told me. "And yet, when it becomes this infectious type of prion protein, when it interacts with other normal prion proteins," they start misfolding. Diamond guessed it was CJD before anyone else. He didn't want to scare us.

"What your father ended up having is such a rare bird," he said. "Not something we see very often. That was really out of the blue."

At least a rare bird is pretty. Nothing about this was pretty.

I know I technically lived through spring last year. I ran a cherry blossom race in Washington in April. I went for walks with my dad around our neighborhood, each time needing to monitor his movements more closely so he wouldn't wander too far into the street. I look at the dates on my phone and see that, yes, in fact, I kept track of time.

But I wasn't really living. I took a step back from work to sit with my dad during the day and try (ultimately futile) speech therapy exercises. I recorded conversations on my phone to play back so I could hang on to his voice for as long as possible. I watched home videos with my sister to remember what his voice used to sound like, before this disease butchered his brain so much every word sounded slurred and stagnant.

I cried, and cried, and cried. My mom cried. My sisters cried. My brother cried. My dad cried. One spring night, all of us together, in our parents' bed, when my dad let out a sob so loud I thought he laughed. When the totality of a life about to end hit my dad in an increasingly rare moment of lucidity. What else could he do but sob? What could any of us do but lie there and weep?

The day he died, May 16, 2022, it rained periodically. Shortly after the shock I went outside, wearing his boots. It smelled like rain. Smelled like spring.

Spring is a time of rebirth, of resurgence, of flowers in bloom and pollen and sneezes. A time of change toward something brighter, warmer. Spring knocks us forward and sends us into the future, unwieldy in our stature.

This spring, I'm moving forward and smelling flowers. But I know it's OK to lurch back, too.

OF INTEREST TO ALL Soaring to New Heights: Vacuum Airships By Iliia Toli Vacuum airships are a transformative technology that obviates the need for costly infrastructure. Iliia Toli, 2Ph.D. has shown in his project at San Jose State University that they are cheap and feasible with the current technology and materials and is proceeding to build them with his startup. They can replace most satellites, oceangoing ships, trains, cranes, trucks, buses, and personal vehicles. They can be used to launch spacecraft at very high altitudes with wide launch windows. They consume far less energy (electricity or fuel) than all current vehicles. They are the next thing that you do not yet know that you cannot live without. Vacuum is lighter, cheaper, and safer than hydrogen. It does not ignite like hydrogen. The problem has been, how to contain the vacuum. In his M.S. project in aerospace engineering at San Jose State University, California, Iliia answers this question. He designs airships that are regular icosahedral structures made of aluminum I-beams, covered with Kevlar or thin steel sheets. The idea is counterintuitive, how can steel be lighter than air? Well, we know that steel can be lighter than water because we have been building steel ships for over a century now. By the same token, steel can be lighter than air. The square-cube law has been used for centuries in the shipbuilding industry to build bigger and bigger ships, the only limitation being ports, bridges, and shipping lanes. Available on AMAZON
