22. Philadelphia Eagles: OT JC Latham, Alabama

His defensive needs aside, if a blocker with this much potential is available, could Philly EVP/GM Howie Roseman really help himself? The 6-6, 342-pound Latham has experience at guard, and there's a hole there with Cam Jurgens sliding into the center spot vacated by retired Jason Kelce. But Latham's long-term home is at right tackle, and with All-Pro Lane Johnson turning 34 next month and out of guaranteed money, he could be following Kelce out the door in the near future.

23. Chargers [PROJECTED TRADE with Cleveland Browns via Houston Texans and Vikings]: WR Ladd McConkey, Georgia

The Bolts' trade with Minnesota allows them to address two glaring needs in Round 1 - offensive line and, here, receiver following the departures of starters Keenan Allen and Mike Williams. McConkey would provide Herbert with a reliable option either outside or from the slot, where he could maybe best complement 2023 first-rounder Quentin Johnston, who struggled as a rookie.

24. Dallas Cowboys: OL Jackson Powers-Johnson, Oregon

Plenty of needs for a team that has been restricted from doing much with free agents due to its bloated salary cap. The 2023 Rimington Trophy winner as the country's best college center, "JPJ" - who excels as a run and pass blocker - could replace departed C Tyler Biadasz or slide one spot to the left and allow LG Tyler Smith to kick out to the longtime post vacated by LT Tyron Smith. Also worth noting, RG Zack Martin is out of contract in 2025.

25. Green Bay Packers: OT Tyler Guyton, Oklahoma

Well, we know GM Brian Gutekunst won't take a receiver at this spot. Guyton, a former tight end incidentally, would bring high-end potential and flexibility to a line that's lost LT David Bakhtiari and G Jon Runyan Jr. Guyton played some left tackle for the Sooners but was mostly on the right side. That could provide options in Green Bay, where incumbent OT Zach Tom has also lined up on either end of the line.

26. Tampa Bay Buccaneers: DE Chop Robinson, Penn State

His eye-popping athleticism - the 6-3, 254-pounder ran a sub-4.5 40 at the combine - doesn't necessarily align with his production, which included 9 1/2 sacks and 17 1/2 TFLs in two seasons with the Nittany Lions. But he could be a real asset to a defense that was reliant on the blitz in 2023 and just lost OLB Shaq Barrett.

27. Cardinals (from Texans): DL Darius Robinson, Missouri

The 6-5, 285-pound All-SEC selection has the size and athleticism to play inside or out while thriving against the run or pass - all traits a defense that's weak up front and allowed the second-most points in 2023 could badly use.

28. Buffalo Bills: WR Adonai Mitchell, Texas

After divorcing themselves from Diggs and Gabe Davis this offseason, the Bills clearly need to replenish the wideout position beyond free agent gadget signing Curtis Samuel. Mitchell has Velcro hands, postseason bona fides, size (6-2, 205) and exceptional speed (4.34 40 time) - a combo that should dovetail with Josh Allen, who likes to go deep but can benefit from a larger catch radius on intermediate throws. A Georgia transfer, Mitchell found the end zone 11 times during his only season with the Longhorns.

29. Raiders [PROJECTED TRADE with Detroit Lions]: QB Michael Penix Jr., Washington

A strong pro day certainly didn't damage his stock. If not for his history of

Alabama outside linebacker/defensive end Dallas Turner has a case to be the draft's top defensive prospect. JOHN DAVID MERCER/USA TODAY SPORTS knee and shoulder problems, which predates Penix's time with the Huskies, he'd probably be projected as a top-10 selection. So trading back into the first round to get him could be a real steal for Las Vegas, while also allowing the Lions - GM Brad Holmes has indicated he's committed to strengthening the roster without necessarily making a bold move for the reigning NFC North champs - to build capital, likely adding a second- and a third-round pick in this scenario. Penix's past two seasons with the Huskies were sublime (67 TD passes, 19 interceptions). The Heisman runner-up to Daniels last season, his performance against Texas in the CFP (430 yards, 2 TDs passing) was an all-timer, the southpaw lasers the ball over the field. His maturity and experiences are also pluses.

30. Baltimore Ravens: OT Amarius Mims, Georgia

A right tackle who already knows offensive coordinator Todd Monken's playbook, Mims' 87-inch wingspan and 6-8, 340-pound frame help him block out the sun (perhaps better than the moon). He could start straight away following the trade of previous RT Morgan Moses to the Jets.

31. San Francisco 49ers: DT Johnny Newton, Illinois

The Big Ten's reigning Defensive Player of the Year, who is 6-2 and 304 pounds, is strong, tough, twitchy and certainly disruptive enough to upgrade and deepen the Niners' precious D-line, which took some hits in free agency.

32. Kansas City Chiefs: OT Jordan Morgan, Arizona

It would be fun to give the champs a toy like Texas WR Xavier Worthy, who set the combine record with a 4.21 40-yard dash. But a gaping hole seemingly remains on Mahomes' blind side. Too big a need to ignore unless LT Donovan Smith re-signs or HC Andy Reid and GM Brett Veach have a yet-to-be revealed plan that makes more sense than gambling on unproven Wanya Morris. Barring that, Morgan could be the answer - particularly in pass pro.

Jason Kelce scorches Messi, MLS with MJ hot take

Safid Deen Columnist USA TODAY Sports+

Jason Kelce is getting better at this podcasting thing, and his latest scorching hot take about soccer star Lionel Messi was spot on, and maybe a tad bit harsh.

His brother, Travis Kelce, seemed excited to talk about Messi playing last week at Arrowhead Stadium in Kansas City, in the same stadium Kelce plays in with the Chiefs during the NFL season. But then Jason Kelce stomped on his euphoria.

"Seeing Messi play with Miami is not the same as seeing Messi play for Barcelona or at the world stage of the World Cup. Seeing Michael Jordan on a golf course is not like seeing Michael Jordan in a Bulls uniform, all right? I'm just being honest. It's not," Jason Kelce said during the latest edition of the "New Heights" podcast released Tuesday. "The best soccer players ever at the World Cup is different than seeing Lionel Messi tearing it up in Kansas City - just saying, it's different."

Ouch. Well, Jason, you're right. You could've said "not like seeing Michael Jordan play for the Wizards" instead of golf, but your point does stand. Maybe, Messi will lead Argentina to victory in Copa America 2024 this summer and hoist another trophy - in what might be the last international tournament of his career.

Tune in for that, Jason! Messi's run with Inter Miami in Major League Soccer feels like a World Cup victory lap before he ultimately retires.

That's why soccer fans are clamoring to get a glimpse of him every chance they get, with 72,610 fans seeing Messi score a goal at the Chiefs stadium on April 13, setting a record for the most-attended soccer match in the state of Missouri and the third-most attended MLS game in history.

Messi is expected to play in front of another sellout crowd with at least 64,000 fans inside the New England Patriots' Gillette Stadium, when Inter Miami visits to play the New England Revolution on Saturday.

"It's great. It's electric. He made the MLS fun to watch last year," Travis Kelce said.

"I'm not saying it's not good for MLS. I'm saying it's not as good," Jason Kelce added. "I'm not saying that, like, it sucks he plays in Miami. That's awesome for the MLS and I think it's great for American soccer.

"I just think it's nowhere near when he scores a goal for Argentina, and the entire country is erupting in cheers because it means more to Argentina than any other sport on the planet. That's all I'm saying."

There's no disputing Messi's World Cup run - on the biggest stage in sports - was memorable and legendary.

Not just for how Messi performed, at the height of his game, in what many consider the greatest World Cup final of all time. But because of what it meant for Messi to finally kiss and hoist the World Cup trophy after leading Argentina to a thrilling victory over France in Qatar in December 2022. (A feat, Travis Kelce pointed out to his brother, that occurred just over a year ago.)

The victory cemented Messi's legacy as one of the sport's greatest players, putting a cap on one of the greatest careers the sport has ever seen, following heartbreak after heartbreak Messi experienced in an Argentina jersey despite the championship success he sustained with Barcelona.

It's also unfair to compare Messi's run with Inter Miami to the World Cup. There's just no comparison. It kinda goes without saying before Jason Kelce said it.

So, just enjoy Messi and his Inter Miami games for what they're worth.

A lasting memory for some, and one last glance at greatness for many others.
