Swimming more than fun for Ledecky

Christine Brennan
Columnist
USA TODAY

Katie Ledecky won the women's 800 freestyle final during the Tokyo Olympic Summer Games in 2021.

GRACE HOLLARS/USA TODAY SPORTS

Katie Ledecky, the greatest female swimmer in history, is known for winning Olympic gold medals in the most impressive fashion. But something few might be aware of is what happens when she comes into the post-race press conference, where she spends quite a bit of time deflecting attention from herself and focusing on her competitors.

So how does a person who would rather talk about others than herself actually write a book – about herself?

“You may have picked up on it that I did deflect a little bit by talking about all the people that have played such an instrumental role in my life,” Ledecky said during a recent interview as she discussed her new memoir, the fabulously titled “Just Add Water,” which was published Tuesday by Simon & Schuster.

“I guess that actually is talking about myself,” she acknowledged, “but I really do feel like I’m the product of all the people around me, the people who have come before me, definitely my grandparents, my parents, my brother, my aunts and uncles, cousins. Really I don’t think I would be the swimmer I am without them. So it was great to be able to reflect on that and share a lot of their stories.”

This is a big week for the 27-year-old Ledecky. In addition to the debut of her first book, she will compete at the U.S. Olympic swimming trials in Lucas Oil Stadium in Indianapolis (yes, a pool has been built inside an indoor football stadium) where she is expected to qualify for her fourth U.S. Olympic team in multiple events.

Ledecky will be one of the most-watched athletes at the Paris Games, where she will try to add to her Olympic cache of seven gold medals and three silvers. While she likely will be favored to win gold in the women’s 800 and 1,500 freestyle events as she did in Tokyo three years ago, she will not go unchallenged as younger swimmers who grew up idolizing her are now some of her top rivals.

But first, she’s dishing out some valuable advice in her new book, which in many ways is the perfect primer for parents and their athletic children.

As she details her childhood at a neighborhood pool in the suburbs of Washington, D.C., she had no aspirations of going to the Olympics. She was swimming just for fun.

“I’ve seen it with teammates that they tell the story of how right when they started swimming, they wrote in a first-grade paper that they wanted to go to the Olympics, or somebody declared that they were going to be an Olympian when they won the 25 free at age 8,” she said.

“That was never me and that was never my family. I loved swimming and I definitely fell in love with it right from the start but I played other sports. I was pretty decent at basketball and soccer and was competitive and loved being active, so I loved all these things I was doing.”

As for swimming, she said, “I watched it on TV but when I watched swimming, I never thought I would be at that level. I thought that that was some other realm, I thought that’s so far off and it wasn’t really until I started qualifying for these bigger and bigger meets that all of a sudden qualifying for Olympic trials was the next meet and at that point, it came into the picture and I learned how you qualify for the Olympics.”

But, she said, “It wasn’t the goal from a young age. And so I think that is an important message, it’s a message that you don’t have to be great right from the get-go, you don’t even have to have that goal right from the get-go, there are different journeys that everyone takes.”

For anyone looking for tabloid drama or even a hint of scandal, this isn’t the book for you. It’s just the opposite, a delightful escape from our rancorous world to a place where hard work pays off and dreams do come true.

“I feel very fortunate that I have had a very happy life and no major injury or huge setback or abuse or anything in my life that has derailed me from the path that I’ve wanted to take,” Ledecky said. “When I started writing this, I knew it would be a very positive story.”

“Having that gold medal, seeing the way that it makes little kids smile, older people smile, it can light up somebody’s face, and so just that impact is something that’s very meaningful to me and if the book can be a small part of adding to that, then that’s great and means a lot to me.”

DeChambeau: ‘Boring golf’ key at Pinehurst

Cameron Jourdan
Golfweek | USA TODAY NETWORK

Bryson DeChambeau is perhaps the most interesting man in professional golf.

The 2020 U.S. Open champion is a social media star, from his TikTok page to his YouTube videos. He also made waves this year when he put 3D-printed irons into his golf bag, something that has led to top-10 finishes in the first two majors of the year.

When it comes to boring, DeChambeau is the polar opposite. He has become a fan favorite again in recent months because of his social presence, a title he didn’t have in the months after his move to LIV Golf. But this week, as he prepared for the U.S. Open at Pinehurst No. 2, he is preaching boring.

“If I get my irons in a place where I’m hitting it in the middle of the greens and just playing boring golf, that’s the goal for me this week is try to play as boring a golf as possible,” DeChambeau said Tuesday.

But that’s the challenge that Pinehurst No. 2 in North Carolina presents. While it can reward big tee shots, it’s a ball-striker’s course that will penalize shots barely offline, and the putting surfaces are punishing to any shots that aren’t in the correct location.

“Looking forward to a tough test of golf out here. Pinehurst is no joke,” DeChambeau said. “You have to hit it in the middle of the greens. And this is a Boo Weekley quote, but the center of the green never moves, so I’ll try to focus on that this week.”

DeChambeau has become so popular in part because he goes against the grain and is willing to try things no one else does, and he does it spectacularly. From single-length irons, swinging out of his shoes on drives and tinkering with every little aspect of his swing, he’s not afraid to go out on a limb to gain an advantage while on the course.

However, at a major championship test that’s a bit different than others, don’t expect DeChambeau to swing for the fences on every tee box.

“It stinks hitting a 6-iron off the tee compared to a driver, but sometimes you’ve got to do it and you’ve got to make the right decision for shooting the lowest score out here,” DeChambeau said. “There’s numerous holes like 3, I’d love to go for that green every single day, and I may go for it. I don’t know, you never know with me. Certainly on the tee box if it’s downwind, I’ll give it a go probably.”

DeChambeau finished a shot behind Xander Schauffele at the PGA Championship, finishing at 20 under. It’s more than likely the winning score will be significantly less than that this weekend, but that doesn’t mean DeChambeau won’t entertain the crowds as he has during the first two majors of the year.

“I’m looking forward to a great challenge this week,” DeChambeau said. “It’s a lot of boring golf. It’s definitely different than Valhalla, but I’ll try to do my best to show the crowd some fun drives and some hopefully long-made putts.”

Rory McIlroy, wife reconcile

Cydney Henderson
USA TODAY

Nearly one month after Rory McIlroy filed for divorce from Erica Stoll, the four-time major champion confirmed that he’s reconciled with his wife of seven years after the pair “resolved our differences.”

An attorney representing McIlroy filed a motion to voluntarily dismiss the divorce documents on Tuesday, The Guardian reported. The announcement comes days before the start of the U.S. Open, an event McIlroy last won in 2011.

“There have been rumors about my personal life recently, which is unfortunate,” McIlroy said in a statement to the outlet. “Responding to each rumor is a fool’s game.”

“Over the past weeks, Erica and I have realized that our best future was as a family together. Thankfully, we have resolved our differences and look forward to a new beginning.”

McIlroy and Stoll began dating in 2015 and tied the knot in April 2017 at Ashford Castle in Ireland. They welcomed daughter Poppy Kennedy McIlroy on Aug. 31, 2020, in Jupiter, Florida.

McIlroy, 35, filed divorce documents in Palm Beach County, Florida, on May 13, days ahead of the PGA Championship at Valhalla Golf Club in Louisville, Kentucky, where he finished tied for 12th place at 12-under.

Now, days before the first round of the U.S. Open got underway in North Carolina, McIlroy said he and Stoll have settled their differences and both “look forward to a new beginning.”

The third-ranked golfer in the world has not won a major since 2014. He last won the U.S. Open in 2011 at Congressional Country Club in Bethesda, Maryland. McIlroy is one of the favorites to win the tournament, according to BetMGM odds.

MLB game at Rickwood Field a seminal moment

Bob Nightengale
Columnist
USA TODAY

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. – This is where Willie Mays was born, raised and launched his Hall of Fame baseball career.

This is where the Birmingham Black Barons played in the Negro Leagues, the only league that permitted Mays to play professionally.

This is where four little girls were killed on a Sunday morning in a bombing by the Ku Klux Klan.

This is where the Civil Rights Movement crested in the most segregated city in the country.

This is where white supremacist Bull Connor turned police dogs and high-powered fire hoses on peaceful protesters.

This is the home of 114-year-old Rickwood Field, the oldest professional baseball park in the United States, where the Black Barons played and racism could be forgotten for at least nine innings.

Now, 76 years since Mays helped lead the Black Barons to the 1948 Negro League World Series as a 17-year-old, Major League Baseball is playing its first game at Rickwood with the San Francisco Giants playing the St. Louis Cardinals at 7:15 p.m. EDT Thursday (Fox).

“This is such a blessing, I can’t believe it,” the Rev. Bill Greason, 99, one of only two living Negro League players from 1920 to 1948 and a recipient of the Congressional Gold Medal, told USA TODAY Sports. “This is a place where I grew up, and a place where so many things happened here. Blacks were not allowed to play any place around here. Blacks weren’t allowed to do a lot of things around here. There was a rich side and a poor side. I was on the poor side. But here we are, all of these years later, together, celebrating history. Thank God I’ve been able to live this long to see it.”

Greason will be honored by throwing out the first pitch.

Mays, who spent three years playing at Rickwood, died Tuesday after battling health issues for more than a year. Still, the pageantry will be powerful with Mays’ son, Michael, on hand, along with his godson, home run champion Barry Bonds; Hall of Famers Reggie Jackson, Derek Jeter and David Ortiz; and future Hall of Fame manager Dusty Baker.

The families and ancestors of those who played in the Negro Leagues from 1920 to 1948 will be on hand – with 10 families representing the Negro Leagues Family Alliance – and 59 former Negro League players will be honored.

“This is a seminal moment in Negro League history, and in many ways, this is larger than life,” said Bob Kendrick, president of the Negro Leagues Baseball Museum in Kansas City, Missouri. “We will have a collective eye of baseball world dedicated to salute the Negro Leagues. And to do it at Rickwood Field, a place with history so rich, a place where a young Willie Mays got his start with the Black Barons, what Henry Aaron did here, what Ernie Banks did, how they all validated the talent in the Negro Leagues.”

“When these players walk onto the field, they’re going to feel the spirits of those legendary stars come back through life. That’s what made the ‘Field of Dreams’ game so special in Iowa. But that was a movie with a game played on a movie set. That was a reel. This is REAL life.”

There will be tears shed in memory of

Many Negro Leagues games were played at Rickwood Field in Birmingham. JESSICA CARROLL/MLB PHOTOS VIA GETTY IMAGES

Mays, tears of the painful memories of segregation in this country and tears of euphoria with the gathering of the Negro Leagues Family Alliance, with many meetings for the first time.

“I can’t wait to meet and talk to Bill Greason,” said Sean Gibson, the great grandson of legendary Josh Gibson, considered the greatest player in Negro Leagues history. “He’s one of the only few living people who saw Josh Gibson play. I’ll get some good stories about Josh. I don’t get actual players who played against Josh, and now I get to pick his brain about my great grandfather. For me to talk to an actual person who saw my grandfather play is my highlight there.”

Gibson, co-founder of the Negro Leagues Family Alliance with the Buck Leonard family, plans to lobby MLB officials during their luncheon Wednesday about an annual Negro Leagues Day on May 2, commemorating the start of the Negro Leagues in 1920.

MLB deputy commissioner Dan Halet and Tony Clark, executive director of the Major League Baseball Players Association, are scheduled to speak and provide a substantial grant for the alliance.

“It’s going to be like a mini-family reunion,” Gibson said. “We’re celebrating this family reunion on Juneteenth and celebrate the Negro Leagues in Birmingham of all places. You can’t get any more history than this.”

There be plenty of stories flowing at the brunch, from the days of Rickwood to Pittsburgh to Kansas City to Detroit to Patterson, New Jersey.

Greason, who lived across the street from Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. in Atlanta, will reminisce about the Civil Rights Movement, winning Game 7 against the Kansas City Monarchs and leading the Black Barons into the 1948 Negro League World Series, becoming the St. Louis Cardinals’ first Black pitcher, and serving two years in the Marines during World War II.

“This was greater than baseball to be at a place called Iwo Jima and to see the atomic bomb fall in Nagasaki,” said Greason, who still preaches every Sunday at Bethel Baptist Church. “Our life was in danger and I returned without a scratch. I lost two of my best friends.”

“And here I am, still breathing at 99. I’m thankful to be able to live this long. I was blessed to play with Willie Mays, and to see Roberto Clemente, two of the greatest players I ever saw in my life.”

Ron Teasley, 97, grew up in Detroit, played in the Negro Leagues with the New York Cubans, was signed by the Brooklyn Dodgers to play in their farm system, and met Jackie Robinson at their spring training headquarters in Vero Beach, Florida.

“My dad would take me to see those great Negro League players because we weren’t allowed to see the Detroit Tigers,” said Teasley, the first member of his family to attend college and graduate from Wayne State University. “You’d hear about Oscar Charleston and Josh Gibson and the way folks bragged about them. I had such great admiration for the Negro Leagues.”

“What impressed me so much was the love these guys had for the game. My favorite was Buck Leonard. My father’s favorite was Turkey Stearnes. My father idolized him. He came to my house one day and my father was so overjoyed he was late for work, and he was never late for work.”

Teasley’s father was worried when Teasley went to play baseball in the Deep South. Teasley had never been to the South, and when he arrived he was warned by his teammates to be extremely cautious.

“You were afraid when you got stopped by the police, so the players told me what to do,” Teasley said. “They told me you’re going to get stopped, and you better say the right terms. You better say the word ‘Sir.’ And they’re always going to ask you where you’re from.”

“When you got stopped, you told them what you’re doing there, and they’d always say, ‘Where’s Satchel Paige? Where’s Satchel?’ We’d say, ‘He’s waiting for us at the ballpark.’ Everyone knew Satchel.”

Teasley is most proud of his impact as a teacher in the world of education, while also serving in the Navy during World War II, and meeting President Barack Obama at the White House.

His greatest claim to fame as a ballplayer, he says, is hitting a triple off Paige during an exhibition game at Dequindre Park in Detroit.

“I was a utility player, and I guess I knew my place when I was supposed to start one game for the Negro League Cubans,” Teasley said. “Well, when Minnie Mino arrived, he did not bring his uniform. So, guess whose uniform they gave him?”

Teasley, who never played at Rickwood, always wonders how long the Negro Leagues would have flourished if the Dodgers had not integrated baseball in 1947 with Jackie Robinson, and two months later when Cleveland signed Newark star Larry Doby.

“We were kind of concerned when he signed,” Teasley said, “because we knew that pretty much meant the end of the Negro Leagues. Fans stopped coming to our games. It was a happy time, but a sad time, too.”

The Negro Leagues were never the same, but the memories will last forever, passed on to generations and generations.

The Giants-Cardinals game, with players wearing Negro League jerseys, culminates a tribute to Rickwood and the Negro Leagues. This comes in the aftermath of Negro Leagues stats being formally incorporated into MLB stats and with retirement benefits paid to all living players.

They had Play Ball clinics for local Boys and Girls Clubs and Nike RBI programs; a symposium with financial advice for Black-owned businesses; a minor league baseball game and a celebrity softball game filled with former stars.

Folks in Birmingham, with nearly $6 million spent in renovating Rickwood Field, are hoping this becomes an annual event.

Others are hoping MLB plays this annual game in different Negro League ballparks, like refurbished Hinchliffe Stadium in Patterson, New Jersey, where Doby played, or Hamtramck Stadium in the Detroit area.

There, of course, is the eternal hope that the Rickwood Game spurs interest that could lead to an increase of Black players in today’s game. It’s appalling to think there are just as many former Negro League players from 1920 to 1948 alive (Greason and Teasley) as active Black players who will be on the field (Masyn Winn of the Cardinals and Jordan Hicks of the Giants).

Just 5.7% of all players on opening-day rosters and injured lists this year are Black, the lowest percentage since 1955, according to USA TODAY Sports’ research.

“This is a great platform, now we’re hoping there will be a lot of change after this,” said Gibson, who also is advocating for the MVP award to be named after his great grandfather.

“There have been a lot of great strides made. Now, it’s time to see more.”
