Michael Porter Jr. (1) and Cameron Johnson (2) are switching teams in a trade. GREGORY FISHER/IMAGN IMAGES

Both Nuggets, Nets win in trade of Porter Jr., Johnson

Lorenzo Reyes
USA TODAY

Perhaps sensing the shifting balance of power in the NBA Western Conference, the Denver Nuggets swung a deal to keep pace.

Denver is sending forward Michael Porter Jr. and a 2032 unprotected first-round draft pick to Brooklyn for Nets forward Cameron Johnson, a person with direct knowledge of the deal confirmed to USA TODAY Sports. The person spoke under condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to publicly disclose details of the deal prior to an official announcement.

ESPN was first to report the news of the trade.

Here are the grades from the trade:

Cameron Johnson

Once seen as a key piece in the deal that sent Kevin Durant from the Nets to the Suns, Johnson had been languishing away on a Nets team that was still not close to competing in earnest. Since being traded to Brooklyn, the Nets won 71 out of 196 games (.362 winning percentage), including a sweep in the first round of the 2022-23 season playoffs.

Now, Johnson goes to a 50-win team that took the eventual champs to seven games in the conference semifinals and one that is two years removed from a title. With Nikola Jokic’s superb passing ability, Johnson, 29, should thrive.

He’s excellent with the ball in his hands and in pick-and-roll scenarios. Throwing him into the mix with Jokic and point guard Jamal Murray should only lead to a jump in production.

Grade: A

Denver Nuggets

In many ways, this is an interesting trade; both Porter and Johnson have similar skill sets. Both are excellent perimeter shooters and both are decent defenders. Both are signed for two more seasons, through the 2026-27 season. The biggest difference? Johnson is two years older but significantly cheaper.

According to Spotrac.com, Porter carries a cap hit of $79.1 million over the next two seasons. Johnson’s cap hit over that span is $44.1 million, or a difference of around $35 million.

This, essentially, gives the Nuggets far more roster flexibility, and they reportedly have started to use it. Per ESPN, Denver brought back Bruce Brown – a plus defender who excelled during the championship season – on a one-year deal. This season, the Nuggets lacked depth. Now, it’s a strength.

Grade: A-

Brooklyn Nets

The Nets these days are all about draft picks. They like to stash them.

They like to draft with them. Just days after they made all five of their first-round selections, the Nets are taking on the added salary of Porter because of that 2032 unprotected first.

Porter is a better rebounder than Johnson, hauling in 7.0 boards per game to Johnson’s 4.3. He’s a slightly more efficient scorer, though Porter tends to fall into streaky play.

This is trickier to grade for Brooklyn, because it depends on what the franchise does with its picks. If the Nets can turn this 2032 pick into part of a trade package that nets a star, then it’s a home run. If they hold on to it and it leads to a lottery selection in seven years, it could be a home run. If not? It could prolong the rebuild.

Grade: C+

Michael Porter Jr.

For a player who was part of a championship run and on one of the more consistent teams during his tenure there, Porter is going into a very different environment. The Nets are very clearly rebuilding and their focus right now is on developing their young players. Porter just turned 27 on June 29, so he’s also very young. Still, even with the Eastern Conference entirely open, it’s hard to see the Nets threatening with their current roster, at least in the short term.

Elite NBA exec may have sights a bit higher

One of the best front office executives in the NBA is on the open market. Masai Ujiri and the Toronto Raptors have parted ways.

Ujiri had the title of vice chairman and team president and was the Raptors’ alternate governor. Not only did he have a significant impact on roster construction that led to Toronto’s 2019 championship, he was influential when it came to league matters at large.

If a team is looking for an executive to lead the next phase of operations at a high level with a track record of success, Ujiri is the answer.

However, is that what Ujiri wants to do next with his life? He has opportunities in and out of basketball that don’t involve the NBA directly.

I’ve always thought Ujiri may want to have an impact on society beyond basketball: politics, or another type of public service; expanding his Giants of Africa foundation; other charitable organizations. I wondered if New York or Washington, D.C., might be one of his next stops, even if it wasn’t with an NBA team. Being that close to powerful people and organizations makes sense.

Ujiri is smart, thoughtful, savvy in the best ways and is well connected. If Ujiri wanted to text Barack Obama right now, he could.

He has choices, and his next step will be fascinating.

Ujiri’s Giants of Africa provides basketball instruction and mentorship of youth in Africa and hosts camps across the continent. He also has a specific camp for big men – 6-foot-8 and taller.

He has official and unofficial roles in helping the NBA’s international growth in Canada and Africa. When Ujiri joined the Raptors in 2013, Shai Gilgeous-Alexander was a 14-year-old developing a love of the game in Toronto. Today, Gilgeous-Alexander is a 2025 NBA champion and reigning regular-season and NBA Finals MVP.

Ujiri is not single-handedly responsible for the basketball explosion in Canada, but he understands the landscape. He had an official role with the NBA’s Basketball Without Borders and the Basketball Africa League.

Ujiri doesn’t have to decide now. He had one year remaining on his contract, and it’s known throughout the league that the Raptors and ownership are more than fair with compensation.

Teams will call, and he will be wise to listen. But there may be other, more important endeavors on his agenda.

Back-to-back champs keep key core

Mike Brehm
USA TODAY

The Florida Panthers have won back-to-back Stanley Cup titles and have been to the Final three years in a row.

If that doesn’t say start of a dynasty, general manager Bill Zito’s recent magic might have positioned the team for another run and more.

Zito had expressed confidence he could sell his three key pending unrestricted free agents on a winning culture and get Sam Bennett, Aaron Ekblad and Brad Marchand re-signed.

Playoff MVP Bennett was first, agreeing to an eight-year, $64 million extension that was announced before the NHL draft. Then the team announced an eight-year deal for top-pairing defenseman and 2014 No. 1 overall pick Ekblad worth a reported $6.1 million a year on June 30. And reports emerged later in the day that Marchand, who scored 10 playoff goals after arriving in a trade, would be getting a six-year deal worth a little more than $5 million a year. His contract will run until he’s 43.

Zito vowed that the team would spend to the salary cap and it will. And all three are taking under-market contracts to stick around. Also important, they aren’t joining the Panthers’ rivals.

The Panthers now have Aleksander Barkov, Matthew Tkachuk, Sam Reinhart, Bennett, Carter Verhaeghe, Marchand, Anton Lundell, Seth Jones, Ekblad and Gustav Forsling signed through at least 2030.

Zito also made a recent trade for goaltender Daniil Tarasov, 26, who will get to learn under veteran Sergei Bobrovsky and possibly be the Panthers’ No. 1 goalie of the future.

The Panthers are like a family. That camaraderie is a key selling point. So is winning. And the Panthers have put themselves in position to do more.
