Derek Carr's legacy: The Good. The Bad. The courageous.

Mike Freeman

USA TODAY

It may seem weird to ask about the legacy of someone like quarterback Derek Carr, who recently retired. Carr was never one of the elite pass throwers. He's not one of those quarterbacks where words like "legacy" are normally used. That word is normally reserved for someone like Joe Montana. Not Derek

Yet Carr does have a legacy. It's the legacy of the luck of the draw. In Carr's case, bad luck. Like so many other quarterbacks before him, you have to wonder what his career would have been like had he not played for such problematic

It's likely Tom Brady would be Tom Brady in any of the multiverses, but what if Brady had played for six head coaches in his career as Carr did instead of one? Do we know he'd be Brady with that kind of constant upheaval? If he played for bad coaches? For organizations that were inept?

Many of the players who start at quarterback in the league are like Carr. They aren't elite talents. They are the NFL's workhorses. They don't have the skill of Peyton Manning or the athleticism of John Elway. They're the middle class. In many instances, they are also unlucky. That partly was Carr.

Carr's story is universal in the NFL. It will be the story of quarterbacks from this past draft like Cam Ward, Shedeur Sanders or Jaxson Dart. Their success

QB Derek Carr retires because of the effects of injury after 11 seasons, the first nine with the Raiders and the past two with the Saints. BRAD PENNER/IMAGN IMAGES will depend on numerous circumstances beyond their control.

It's easy to be critical of Carr's career. I have been in the past. Never liked how he'd throw teammates under multiple buses. But on the field he's been far better than people think despite some absolutely brutal circumstances. As ESPN notes, Carr played for a staggering six head coaches in his nine years with the Raiders. Two of those coaches were interim. There were five different playcallers. He also had a new coordinator in each of his two seasons with the Saints.

It's difficult to overstate how unbelievably bad those circumstances are. Few quarterbacks would be able to prosper with that kind of turnover. Yet Carr somehow did. He made Pro Bowls and was as tough as they come. Carr would get annihilated behind some bad offensive lines with both the Raiders and the Saints. Yet he'd get hit and get right back up. He played in 15 or more games, ESPN says, in each of his first 10 NFL seasons.

Carr was genuinely a highly courageous player, especially with the Raid-

Carr was far from perfect, of course. He would make some of the most inexplicable interceptions you'd ever see. Just head-scratching stuff. Carr was once blasted by a former teammate who ranted that the quarterback was an inaccurate thrower.

Carr also had just one career playoff appearance (a loss in an AFC wild-card game in 2022 while with the Raiders). He was good, at times even top 10 at his position, but not good enough to put bad franchises on his back and win postseason contests.

For someone of his stature (an NFL quarterback), Carr could also be remarkable thin-skinned. He'd go on blocking sprees on Twitter (now X) after even mild criticism. It became almost a running joke. There were two types of Twitter users: those blocked by Carr and those who would be. He blocked me years ago. I also just checked. I'm still blocked.

Carr was once asked why he puts so much effort into blocking people.

"You probably said something silly," Carr replied. "You probably said something crazy. I mute and block people all the time. You maybe didn't even say it about me, you maybe said it about one of my best friends, man. And so I'm sorry that it's come to this. If you wanna go have lunch, we can have lunch, man. From six feet distance, with masks on. All the protocols. You know, I'm not tryin' to get in trouble in the city again, you know?

"So we can do that. But I block, man. Some of you all probably got blocked on here, too. But we're still friends. You know? I just don't want to read the negativity, man. I don't want someone to tweet it or come at. I don't wanna see it. So it's nothin' personal, man. That's social media. I'm still me in person, you

It was an honest answer. I'll give him

So what is Carr's legacy? He was a solid player who made the best of his limited talent while playing on (mostly) bad teams. No, it's not a Brady-type leg-

But it's not bad, either.

Jags coach reveals Hunter's workout plan for rookie minicamp

Jacob Camenker

USA TODAY

The Jacksonville Jaguars began the unique challenge of preparing Travis Hunter to play both offense and defense as their NFL rookie minicamp opened over the weekend.

Hunter began minicamp working at the wide receiver position. First-year Jaguars coach Liam Coen provided insight into when interested parties might see the rookie at cornerback during a media availability May 10.

"Yeah, he'll be able to get integrated next week on the defensive side of the ball," Coen told reporters, per NFL Net-

Why did the Jaguars begin with Hunter working at receiver for multiple sessions? Jacksonville's goal was to see Hunter make strides at the position before also testing him at cornerback.

'We just kind of ended up making a decision that from yesterday to today we wanted to be able to clean up some of the things that we may have been able to miss yesterday, get extra reps on the offensive side of the ball, and next week he'll start to roll on defense," Coen explained.

Many expect Hunter to play receiver primarily during his first NFL season, which may also have played a part in Jacksonville's decision.

Hunter appears to be on board with the Jaguars' plan. He said he was "getting used to" learning two NFL playbooks but acknowledged learning Jacksonville's offense was the more challenging task.

"It's just a lot of different types of calls, but other than that, the defense is pretty easy," Hunter said. "You've just got to get used to the offense."

Coen seems confident Hunter won't have any issues picking things up on both sides of the ball after winning the Heisman Trophy while doing so at Colorado.

"He's a football-smart guy," Coen said of Hunter. "The game makes sense to him. And so now it's just about putting in that time, that extra time that he's going to have to do in order to be successful to play even one side of the ball at this level. So he knows what's cut out for him coming up."

Thunder unleash running game as Nuggets wilt

Lorenzo Reyes

USA TODAY

This was a categorical Oklahoma City demolition.

The Thunder blitzed the Denver Nuggets in a 125-93 victory to take Game 7 of their NBA Western Conference semifinal, setting up a showdown against the Minnesota Timberwolves in the conference finals.

Oklahoma City guard and MVP candidate Shai Gilgeous-Alexander led all players with 35 points on 12 of 19 shooting (63.2%). His competition for the award, Nuggets center Nikola Jokic, scored 17 of his 20 points in the first half. (MVP voting concluded before the playoffs began).

Winners and losers from Game 7:

Thunder's balance and depth: Known for being one of the more cohesive teams in the NBA, the Thunder lived up to their reputation. Through their first 35 points, all eight players who had entered had scored, with no player recording more than six points. Oklahoma City's eight-man rotation shot 51.6% from the field and recorded 26 assists on 44 field goals.

Alex Caruso's defense: Nuggets center Nikola Jokic'is listed at 6-foot-I1 and 284 pounds. Thunder guard Alex Caruso, acquired this offseason, is listed at 6-5, 186. Yet, Oklahoma City coach Mark Daigneault opted to deploy Caruso as the primary defender on Jokic'and Caruso responded, not backing down, using his physicality and strength to pester Jokic' until help arrived. In the first half, Jokic'shot 1 of 6 from the floor when Caruso was the primary defender. Overall, Caruso forced four turnovers and was key in another, with a timely double team that forced a 24-second shot clock violation in the fourth Christian Braun: One of the few bright spots for the Nuggets, third-year guard Christian Braun posted a very efficient 19 points on 7 of 14 shooting. Braun scored nine in the first quarter and looked to rush out in transition throughout the game.

OKC runs in 2nd quarter: Behind swarming defense and forced turnovers, the Thunder went on a pair of debilitating runs during opposite ends of the second quarter. Going back to the one-minute mark at the end of the first quarter, the Thunder went on a 16-3 run. Then, Oklahoma City closed the first half on an 18-5 run.

LOSERS

Nuggets' second quarter: Denver,

for the most part, held its own in the first quarter, taking a five-point lead into the second period. But cold shooting, carelessness with the ball and no answer for Oklahoma City's swarming defense and transition offense led to a massive turnaround. The Nuggets were outscored in the period by 19 points, shooting 6 of 20 (30%) from the field.

Jamal Murray: With Aaron Gordon hobbled, gutting it out and playing just three days after suffering a left hamstring strain, the Nuggets needed a big day from point guard Jamal Murray. Unfortunately for Denver, he did not deliver. Murray, who has been battling the flu, started slowly, making just one of his first five shots. Although he did end up with 13 points, much of that came when the game was already out of hand. He finished 6 of 16 from the field, including an abysmal1 of 8 (12.5%) from 3-point range.

The Nuggets from beyond the arc: Speaking of poor shooting from deep, the Nuggets struggled from 3 throughout the game, with the eight-man rotation shooting just 18.9% (7 of 37) from beyond the arc. The Thunder – with their length, size and athleticism – excel at perimeter defense, and it showed.

Denver's ball security: The Thunder are the top defensive team in the NBA and led the league in steals with 10.3 per game. The one thing the Nuggets absolutely could not afford to do, turn the ball over, was exactly what they did in Game 7. Denver gave the ball away 23 times, leading to 37 Thunder points. By comparison, the Thunder committed just 10 turnovers, leading to only seven Nuggets points.

Players may get NFL OK for 2028 LA flag football

Chris Bumbaca

USA TODAY

The NFL released a resolution May 15 that owners will vote on at this week's league meetings in Minneapolis that could be a step forward in the potential participation of NFL players at the 2028 Summer Olympics in Los Angeles.

The resolution gives the management council permission to enter discussions with the NFL Players' Association and other relevant parties, such as the International Olympic Committee. The resolution uses the term "negotiate appropriate arrangements" for a variety of topics, among them including: baseline standards for playing surfaces and medical teams by Olympic flag football teams, player participation limits, financial and health care protection in the event of injury during the Games, the flag football schedule during the Games.

The resolution would require 24 of 32 votes to pass.

Process just beginning

NFL executive vice president of communications, public affairs and policy Jeff Miller said May 15 in a conference call with reporters that the league has been continuing its lengthy dialogue with the NFLPA. The resolution's goal is to give the all-clear to the management council to work on a deal of what participation would look like for the players.

"That is exactly as it says," Miller said. "There's more work to be done there."

The resolution would permit the management council "an approach" to the players participating. Per the resolution, those negotiations would be with national governing bodies and Olympic authorities (the IOC).

"I would expect it to be a robust and engaging conversation on that topic," Miller said.

How many NFL players would be allowed to play?

Miller clarified teams can have multiple players participate, but only one per country. If a team has a designated International Pathway Program participant, he can play without counting toward the designation.

What needs to happen for players to be at the Olympics?

All parties are interested in making this happen, but it will be a deliberate march to the finish line.

Field conditions – "basic things," Miller said – are the types of conditions that have to be hammered out.

"We want the best possible health and safety standards, just like we do in a game," Miller said.

Last February, NFLPA executive director Lloyd Howell previewed what would need to occur for an agreement between the league and union to happen. "There are details around, let's say someone is hurt as they're getting ready for the Olympics. Is it covered by (league) protection or not? So what allowances, given that football hasn't been in the Olympics, that would accommodate that type of thing?" Howell said

Former NFL quarterback Michael Vick attempts a pass during a celebrity flag football game at Mandalay Bay Convention Center on Feb. 9, 2024, in Las Vegas. IAN MAULE/GETTY IMAGES

These are the types of issues the management council and the NFLPA could start discussing if the owners pass the resolution.

Training camp conflicts likely

The Olympics would end around the time training camps traditionally begin. The 2028 Summer Games are scheduled for July 14-30. Part of the resolution called for a "schedule for flag football games and related events in such a way that does not unreasonably conflict" with NFL players' schedules.

The Games could schedule the flag football competition early in the multiweek program to best accommodate the NFL.

Dallas Cowboys owner Jerry Jones said at the April owners' meeting "timing, availability, conflicts, that type of thing," concerned him more than injury settlements being the hang-up in any potential negotiations, according to The Washington Post.

Among interested NFL players, Miami Dolphins wide receiver Tyreek Hill told USA TODAY Sports in 2023 that he'd be interested in participating in flag football at the 2028 Olympics.

The NFL is heavily invested and interested in flag football

NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell was asked about the prospect of players participating in the LA28 Olympics at his annual news conference the week of the Super Bowl.

"I've heard directly from a lot of players who want to participate and represent their country, whether it's the United States or the country that they came from, to have them participate in that," Goodell said in New Orleans on Feb. 3. "And I think that's something that we'll continue the discussions with, not just the union, but also the clubs. I think both of those are things that we will probably resolve sometime in the next 60 days."

United States Olympic and Paralympic CEO Sarah Hirshland said on April 17 it'll be a multi-pronged discussion as that continues to move forward.

USA Football (which recently received USOPC recognition as the national governing body) CEO and executive director Scott Hallenbeck told The Athletic the league has been in "regular communication" with the governing body.
