17 RSM Classic pros trust this swing coach

Adam Schupak
Golfweek | USA TODAY NETWORK

The busiest pro at the PGA Tour's RSM Classic this week won't hit a single shot nor will he sign a scorecard. But he could influence who walks off with the trophy as he did last year. It's swing instructor Scott Hamilton, who counts 17 players in the 156-man field as his students, and it would have been 18 had Maverick McNealy not elected to skip his title defense due to the recent birth of his first child.

"Scott has one of the deepest understandings of the golf swing and the mechanics and biomechanics of anyone in the game," said McNealy, who has enjoyed a steady rise under Hamilton's watchful eye. "If you met him on the street, you wouldn't think that but he's kind of a savant."

The number of players Hamilton works with at any time fluctuates depending on the week. Caddies, statisticians and agents steer players his way. For nearly 20 years, he has been in high demand and traveling to wherever his players are competing at least 35 weeks per year. "It's easier to tell you the weeks I wasn't on tour," he said.

Hamilton, 60, apprenticed as an instructor at Harbour Town and Haig Point in South Carolina in the 1980s. But it was a lesson from pro George Kelnhofer that made him an early adopter of video as a teaching tool. Hamilton received a Sony video camera from his wife for his 25th birthday, and he has been recording swings ever since.

Jason Bohn was Hamilton's first student to play the PGA Tour; Boo Weekley, who made it to the Charles Schwab Cup Championship, limited to the top 36 in the season-long points race, is his longest-running relationship; and Chris Kirk probably has been his best meal ticket.

Hamilton analyzes launch monitor numbers but keeps it simple and dishes out plenty of folksy words of wisdom such as "You don't have a bad attitude; you just don't have a square clubface!"

When he isn't following the tour, Hamilton teaches at Cartersville (Georgia) Country Club, where cutoff jeans and T-shirts are common sightings on the course. The laidback Hamilton, who has been recognized as the Georgia Section PGA teacher of the year, has served as head professional and now director of golf there since 1993.

Golf instructor Scott Hamilton has been known to have the largest stable of pros and typically attends 35 PGA Tour tournaments to get his players "calibrated." TRACY WILCOX/GOLFWEEK

His three bays at the back of the range, which he built in 1998 and paid for himself, are the definition of function over fashion while decked out with all the latest technology any tour pro could possibly need. He built a separate indoor studio in town and installed Gears 3-D motion capture, a full-body optical motion tracking system designed to measure and analyze every aspect of a golfer's swing. Having the ability to 3-D so many tour pros has helped Hamilton visually break down a 2-D video in a better manner. "The Gears 3-D probably is the best investment I've ever made in myself," he said.

Tour pros have been beating down his door and making the trip to the northwest edge of the Atlanta metropolitan area to get their fix.

"You wouldn't walk in there thinking this is home of one of the best instructors in the world," McNealy said. "He manages to boil down all the information to something very simple. He's helped me understand the road map for my golf swing."

Hamilton's facility has been described as a frat house, which is fitting because he has created a fraternity of sorts among his players. They often visit his facility at the same time, stay at his house, practice on the putting green in his basement and eat at his dinner table. The local Cracker Barrel can claim to have fed its fair share of tour pros too.

"Guys just know when they go to Cartersville, two things hit your soul: Cracker Barrel, and you leave town with more answers than you arrived with," said caddie Travis McAlister, whose current employer, Gordon Sargent, is one of the more recent pupils of Hamilton.

Jacob Bridgeman never had a proper swing coach until he began working with Hamilton. When he turned pro, he realized he'd never own his swing until he learned to understand its inner workings better. He asked his college coach, agent and one other person he trusted to name a swing instructor whom they respected, and all three gave him the same name. So he called up Hamilton.

"I thought he was going to be some regular guy, and he answers the phone and he sounds like a redneck. I thought, yeah, I kind of like this guy," said Bridgeman, who made the Tour Championship this season in his second year on the PGA Tour despite failing to win. "He helped me drive it straighter and hit my irons higher. It seems like every time he's working with me lately someone comes over and asks him to look at his swing and he helps them for 30 minutes and they start striping it."

Mackenzie Hughes is another of the newer members of the Hamilton stable that includes the likes of Tom Hoge, Carson Young, Nick Dunlap and Chandler Phillips, runner-up in Bermuda.

"Maverick went from a good tour player to a top-10 player in the world and that's something I want to emulate," said Hughes, explaining his decision to join Team Hamilton.

Hamilton has a knack for finding the most important area of a player's game to fix and concentrating on it.

"Let's cut the tumor out and the rest of the parts will fall into place," said Hamilton, who doesn't have one method he teaches. "I do a check book for each of my players. They're all different. I'm just trying to calibrate."

Get in line if you want a checkup from the busiest pro on Tour.

F1 hits Sin City for night street racing

Mark Giannotto
USA TODAY

Three races remain in the Formula 1 season, and the world's most prestigious motor racing series is back in the United States for the second time in just over a month. The Las Vegas Grand Prix is set to take place this week from the streets of Sin City, and there's a ton at stake for drivers and teams up and down the standings.

McLaren enters with the Constructors' Championship clinched for the second year in a row, but McLaren teammates Lando Norris and Oscar Piastri have been engaged in a duel for the Drivers' Championship. They have combined to win 14 grand prix races this season, but Norris has emerged as the winner in back-to-back races to extend his lead over Piastri to 24 points.

Max Verstappen of Red Bull, the four-time world champion, remains in Drivers' Championship contention after winning at the Circuit of the Americas in Texas on Oct. 19. He trails by 49 points.

Mercedes, Red Bull and Ferrari are jockeying for second place in the Constructors' Championship standings.

This is the third year in a row Las Vegas has hosted F1, and the past two races produced exciting street circuit action with the long straightaway on Las Vegas Boulevard providing a memorable backdrop. Verstappen won in '23 and George Russell of Mercedes last year.

The Las Vegas Grand Prix is scheduled to begin at 11 p.m. ET on Saturday Nov. 22 and will be broadcast by ESPN and livestreamed at ESPN+ and Fubo.

James H. Williams
USA TODAY

The Atlanta Braves have re-signed closer Raisel Iglesias for the 2026 MLB season.

Iglesias signed a one-year, $16 million deal, the team announced Wednesday Nov. 19. He spent the previous three-plus seasons in Atlanta after being traded by the Los Angeles Angels.

Iglesias

Iglesias, 35, has a 15-12 record as a member of the Braves, recording 97 saves in 218 ⅔ innings pitched. He has allowed 157 hits, 69 runs and 19 home runs and struck out 239.

Later Wednesday, the Braves announced they had acquired infielder Mauricio Dubon from the Astros for infielder Nick Allen.

COLLEGE FOOTBALL

Fans to keep an eye on rivalries, CFP impact

Eddie Timanus
USA TODAY

As college football's regular season comes to a close, it's time to enjoy the feast after the feast. The weekend slate is jam-packed with meaningful contests, many of which will pit the fiercest of rivals against each other.

As longtime readers know, we can't preview every game here. While we're sure many of you will be interested in the Egg Bowl (noon ET Friday Nov. 28, ABC) and the Iron Bowl (7:30 p.m. ET Saturday, ABC), we'll respectfully direct the discerning fan's attention to these contests with even more on the line. Here then are our picks for the seven games you don't want to miss.

Ohio State wide receiver Carnell Tate runs after a catch as Michigan defender Zeke Berry makes the tackle during their 2024 game. JOSEPH MAIORANA/IMAGN IMAGES

No. 1 Ohio State at No. 15 Michigan

Time/TV: Saturday, noon ET, Fox.

Why watch: We're quite sure you don't actually need to ask, but we stick to the script regardless. As we saw last year, this is not a must-win for the Buckeyes. But don't tell that to their fans, who hope to see their team snap a four-year losing streak against the hated Wolverines. As for Michigan, a win here could mean a berth in the Big Ten title game and would certainly merit at-large consideration. The Buckeyes used their most recent romp against Rutgers to fine-tune their ground attack, a worthwhile endeavor given the Wolverines' defensive strength. But Ohio State's advantage figures to be on the outside, assuming WRs Jeremiah Smith and Carnell Tate are ready to return to QB Julian Sayin's impressive arsenal. Wolverines QB Bryce Underwood has had only sporadic success throwing the ball but has been helped by RB Jordan Marshall. But they, too, could have a hard time finding holes against Buckeyes defenders Sonny Styles and Caleb Downs.

Why it could disappoint: Mother Nature might have a hand in this one, with the possibility of frozen precipitation in the forecast that might curtail any deep passing. In theory that would seem to work in Michigan's favor, though the ground game might also be affected. In any case, a big lead either way might prove insurmountable.

No. 3 Texas A&M at No. 16 Texas

Time/TV: Friday, 7:30 p.m. ET, ABC.

Why watch: As if bragging rights throughout the Lone Star State weren't enough, this contest carries huge SEC title and College Football Playoff implications. The Aggies will play for the conference crown if they win here in Austin. The Longhorns can't, but they'll be very much in the at-large conversation if they can spring an upset. Notwithstanding a rough outing at Georgia a couple of weeks ago, the Texas offense has operated with more crispness over the course of QB Arch Manning's first full season as the starter, although last week's output might be more attributable to Arkansas's leaky defense. A&M isn't always airtight either, but DE Cashius Howell must be accounted for at all times. The Aggies have always found points when they've needed them thus far, though QB Marcel Reed can be pick prone when under duress, and it will be Longhorns DE Colin Simmons bringing the heat. The game also features two of the nation's most dangerous return threats, the Longhorns' Ryan Niblett and A&M's K.C. Concepcion.

Why it could disappoint: It's unlikely that it will. Both teams have demonstrated a flair for the dramatic, and the intensity level will be dialed up to 11 given the stakes.

No. 4 Georgia vs. No. 19 Georgia Tech

Time/TV: Friday, 3:30 p.m. ET, ABC.

Why watch: These Peach State foes staged eight overtimes worth of "clean old-fashioned hate" last season. They aren't likely to duplicate that, but there's a lot on the line for the Yellow Jackets, who missed an opportunity to clinch a spot in the ACC title game and now need an at-large résumé booster. This year's edition will be off campus at Atlanta's Mercedes-Benz Stadium, which will offer a unique environment. The Bulldogs can't really help themselves but would like to enter the postseason on a high note anyway. Georgia QB Gunner Stockton has been quite efficient of late, improving his completion rate to a healthy 71.4%. DL Jordan van den Berg and the Yellow Jackets' front seven hope to do a better job securing the line of scrimmage. Tech QB Haynes King is more than capable of keeping pace, though he tends to take a lot more punishment with his commitment to running regularly. The Bulldogs have been more cohesive on defense over the latter half of the season, though standout LB CJ Allen is likely out after leaving the Texas game early with a knee injury

Why it could disappoint: It won't if it's anything close to last year's version, but while Georgia has looked the part of a Playoff team in November, the Yellow Jackets have not. Another slow start by Georgia Tech would be disastrous.

No. 13 Miami at No. 24 Pitt

Time/TV: Saturday, noon ET, ABC.

Why watch: The Hurricanes need a lot of help they quite frankly aren't likely to get to play for the ACC title. But they need to help themselves first by toppling the Panthers, who are fresh off a big win against Georgia Tech and might also have a shot at the ACC crown. The formula is pretty simple for Miami QB Carson Beck – get the ball in the hands of WR Malachi Toney as often as possible without giving it away. That will mean keeping the ball out of the reach of Panthers DB Kavir Bains-Marquez, who has three of the team's 14 interceptions. Pitt QB Mason Heintschel must be similarly concerned with ball security, though that will be easier if he continues to get production from RB Ja'Kyrian Turner. Miami DE Rueben Bain Jr. will make that difficult.

Why it could disappoint: While it might be overly simplistic to say the Panthers phoned in the Notre Dame game and put all of their proverbial eggs in the ACC basket, that's certainly how it appears. But it's also possible that the Hurricanes will have a similar personnel advantage and make this another rout, though closing out opponents isn't exactly Miami's strong suit.

No. 12 Vanderbilt at No. 18 Tennessee

Time/TV: Saturday, 3:30 p.m. ET, ESPN.

Why watch: Neither team can reach the SEC championship game, but it's nevertheless a contest with significant stakes. That is especially true for the Commodores, who are enjoying their best season in decades that could get even better. The Volunteers probably can't crack the at-large Playoff pool but would still like to keep hopes for a 10-win campaign alive. Vandy QB Diego Pavia is now up to 34 total TDs, and his ball distribution of late has made it difficult for opposing defenses to commit a spy to him. Vols LB Jeremiah Telander will nonetheless want to monitor him. Tennessee QB Joey Aguilar has quick-strike capability but might be better served relying on RBs DeSean Bishop and Star Thomas to control the clock. That will likely mean another busy day for Commodores LB Bryan Longwell and DB CJ Heard.

Why it could disappoint: The manner in which both teams manhandled lower-tier SEC opponents last week indicates they'll be in top form for this one. About the only question is if Vanderbilt can beat a good team away from home.

No. 5 Oregon at Washington

Time/TV: Saturday, 3:30 p.m. ET, CBS.

Why watch: The Ducks secured their 10th victory last week and eliminated Southern Cal from the Playoff picture in the process. They now look to close with a win against another of their former Pac-12 rivals. The Huskies at this point can only play for a more favorable bowl destination but would still not mind handing Oregon a costly setback. The backfield tandem of QB DeMond Williams Jr. and RB Jonah Coleman give Washington enough offensive balance to be troublesome, but LB Bryce Boettcher and the Ducks' front can be quite formidable. Oregon QB Dante Moore has more weapons at his disposal, with TE Kenyon Sadiq often providing the key mismatch in the red zone. The Huskies will need Jacob Lane to provide pressure from the edge.

Why it could disappoint: The Ducks will do their best to make sure it does. Washington has been much better at home but probably won't have enough answers against a top-tier defense.

LSU at No. 8 Oklahoma

Time/TV: Saturday, 3:30 p.m. ET, ABC.

Why watch: A 10-2 record that would include a quality non-conference triumph against Michigan would almost certainly mean a Playoff invitation for the Sooners. The final obstacle is a feisty bunch of Tigers, who are similarly strong on defense but like OU have struggled to score points. The LSU attack will again be in the hands of QB Michael Van Buren with Garrett Nussmeier still sidelined with an abdominal injury. He's almost certainly in for a long day against LB Kip Lewis and the stingy OU defense that ranks third against the run and sixth in scoring. Sooners QB John Mateer has not thrown as effectively since returning from hand surgery, but RBs Xavier Robinson and Tory Blaylock might provide more help this week. There might be good news for the Tigers on the injury front if LB Whit Weeks can play more snaps Saturday.

Why it could disappoint: This has the makings of a punting contest. It could therefore be a tough watch, but there might be a payoff at the end if it's close in the final quarter.
