Dramatic mini HR derby adds spice

Gabe Lacques

ATLANTA - If you're the sort who enjoys plotting the demise of baseball and, in a grander sense, Western civilization - then it all was neatly summed up by one moment in the wee hours at Truist Park.

A line drive striking the faux brick just to the right of a FanDuel advertisement, a crucial moment in a home run hitting contest intended to pump life in a once culturally dominant Midsummer Classic that now claws for viability in the attention economy.

A little heavy, eh?

Well, that's sort of how it felt when this 95th All-Star Game went to extra innings and was decided for the first time by a swing-off, which replaced the mega-roster to ensure there'd be plenty of pitchers for extra innings, which replaced How The Game Once Was, at least until it ended in a tie before a befuddled Bud Selig in 2002.

Yet the game always seems to win, thanks in large part to the stars in the arena who seem to produce spectacular feats, regardless of format. On this night, it was Kyle Schwarber's three homers in three swings that stood up for a National League "victory" after American Leaguer Jonathan Aranda's bullet line drive hit brick and not seats. When Aranda followed with a harmless pop fly that sent the NL into a bobbing mass of celebration down the first-base line, they were 7-6 victors (4-3 on penalty swings).

Somehow, it all worked out. That could be a theme for an All-Star week that was at times grim and sweaty and confusing and at others fresh and fun. With that, the winners and losers from All-Star Week in the A (or at least Cobb County):

Winners Tiebreaker swing-off

The various buttons MLB pushes in the Commissioner Rob Manfred era often serve two purposes: teeth-gnashing followed by pragmatic acceptance.

It was fascinating to discover that everyone from casuals in your contacts list to superstars on the field had no idea – "I honestly had no clue this was a thing," says Giants pitcher Logan Webb - what was to come. Yet the swing-off - the derby after the Derby, if you will – has been on the books since 2022.

They just hadn't had to break the glass yet in case of emergency, and July 15 that emergency was Robert Suarez and Edwin Diaz blowing a two-run ninth-inning NL lead.

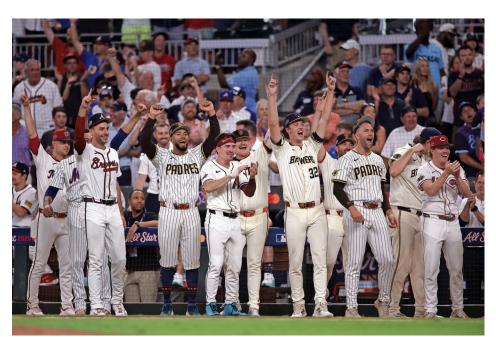

While extra-inning baseball has its charms, there can be a certain death march element to it. And in an All-Star Game, it honestly comes down to leftover pitchers trying to get out batters who hadn't yet hopped a private jet to their final All-Star break destinations.

Nah, we weren't exactly "robbed" of drama not seeing Shane Smith and Hunter Goodman clash in the bottom of the 11th, just one scenario had managers not had the freedom to burn all of their pitchers before game's end.

And while roughly half the 41,702 in attendance had departed, those who remained were plenty engaged by the oohs and aahs of the swing-off.

Kyle Schwarber

The baddest dude on the first-place Philadelphia Phillies is seemingly universally respected in the game, and his ability to take three batting practice pitches and put them all in the seats with a result literally on the line – goes to his superior skill and ability to focus. That man is a free agent at the end of the year, and his late-night power show, even coming in a fake game, nicely illustrated why he'll be paid superstar money and not DH money.

Players who like playing baseball

If the swing-off exposed anything to the casual fan, it's that the All-Star starters - typically the game's biggest superstars - have long beaten a hasty path to the airport by game's end. Hey, they got places to be and money to burn and it is their break time.

That's why teams lock in their three swing-off participants ahead of time, knowing who will be around in a 10th inning - and no, it almost surely won't be Aaron Judge and Shohei Ohtani.

But anytime he's on the roster, Mets slugger Pete Alonso counts himself in. The two-time Home Run Derby champion is both an avid competitor and a ball enthusiast.

And there's something of a difference between dudes who both love baseball and are very good at it, and those for whom the latter is the only qualifier.

That's not to say the players who begged off this All-Star Game - ultimately more than 80 were named to the rosters - don't love it. Rest is important and unpublicized injuries are very real.

But it never hurts to have stars who want to be here.

"It's an honor for me," says Alonso. "Certain guys, if they're banged up, it's situational. But I'm healthy and I'm appreciative and it's a great event. For me, it's a no-brainer to come."

Cal Raleigh

Sometimes, a player will have his star-is-born year and back it up at an All-Star Game expected to serve as his platform – think Judge in 2017.

Raleigh roared into the break with an AL-record 38 first-half homers, the curiosity of being a switch-hitting catcher outslugging Judge and the best nickname in the game - and backed all of it

His Home Run Derby championship was both a compelling tale and a remarkable feat and gives the game a legitimate star in a Pacific Northwest outpost that too often gets ignored.

Dino Ebel

He might be the greatest batting practice pitcher of all time, or at least the most decorated. Ebel has been the soft tosser for two Home Run Derby champions - Vladimir Guerrero Sr. in 2007 and Teoscar Hernández in 2024 and as the clock neared midnight July 15 he climbed halfway up the Truist Park mound and tossed cookies to Stowers and Schwarber.

Four of the six pitches ended up in

"Put a 'W' next to Dino's name in the paper," says Dodgers and NL manager Dave Roberts, whom Ebel serves as LA's third-base coach. "Well, there's no more papers anymore, but Dino should get the win. Absolutely."

That's only the half of it. On July 13, Ebel's son Brady was drafted 32nd overall by Milwaukee, and he has another lad, Trey, who is a well-regarded prospect for the 2026 draft. Let's just say mid-July has been very good to the Ebel

Losers The MLB draft

It remains Manfred's pet project, and the optics are good holding it in conjunction with All-Star Week. Enough space fillers wearing overpriced Fanatics gear are willing to fill up the couple of hundred chairs to create a well-crafted television show.

And sliding the draft into the most desirable television slot in the sport supplanting "Sunday Night Baseball" for a day – will ensure its ratings will be sufficient even if the in-person product resembles a Potemkin Village.

Yet it's an undeniable setback that exactly zero prospects showed up all dressed up for the show and ready to grip and grin with Manfred.

They certainly have their reasons, be it advisers who prefer they not forfeit leverage with drafting teams, to the greater uncertainty involved with baseball's draft compared to its NFL and NBA co-

No one wants to get stuck in a green room for a couple of hours, especially an 18-year-old whose reps might be haggling over bonus pool money right up to the moment they'd be picked.

Manfred is perhaps the only baseball official who wants to drag the process into mid-July, putting scouting departments, front offices, college coaches and, of course, the players in flux deep into the summer when the whole thing could be done in early June.

Pat McAfee, or whoever decided to loop him into the festivities

That was weird.

What's usually a pretty rote process the pregame All-Star press conference where starting pitchers and lineups are announced - got a startling charge when McAfee, ESPN's sleeveless ambassador to the Coveted Young Demographic, was on stage to moderate the session.

It's tough to fake baseball, and while McAfee did all right, the entire presser was simply bizarre. It helped that Paul Skenes' presence enabled McAfee to lean into his Yinzer shtick, yet that couldn't save him from mispronouncing Ketel Marte.

And an inquiry from a reporter on baseball's unexplained decision to move the game back to Atlanta after onerous voting laws were passed - and Roberts' general abdication of stances on social issues important to Dodgers fans – resulted in McAfee trying to parry the whole exchange.

He was also tapped to intro the participants in that night's Home Run Derby, which is among ESPN's most important broadcasts all year.

The whole thing smacked of the erstwhile Worldwide Leader signing all of its inventory over to McAfee, and MLB eagerly (desperately?) hoping to cash in some of that cultural currency.

The Phillies

Hey, they're on the clock for the next All-Star Week and the pressure is mounting. The game comes less than two weeks after the country's Semiquincentennial, and there may not be enough red, white and blue to out-America all the Midsummer Classics that came before it.

Also, Kyle Schwarber is a free agent. As this 95th game showed, some things you just can't let get away.

Propelling soccer forward in USA

Safid Deen and Ramon Padilla USA TODAY

It's a rare all-star game that reflects a league's evolution, but that's what this year's MLS show-

On the night of July 23, two dozen MLS players were set to step onto the field at Q2 Stadium in Austin, Texas, and offer a snapshot of the league's

Although the MLS All-Stars may not defeat their counterparts from Mexico's Liga MX, the league's upward trajectory is clear. Since its inaugural season in 1996, just two years after the United States hosted the men's 1994 World Cup, MLS has steadily grown alongside the nation's rising interest in soccer.

Over the past three decades, global icons such as Carlos Valderrama, David Beckham, Thierry Henry and Zlatan Ibrahimovic' have brought star power and credibility to the league, helping shape its identity and elevate its global standing.

But none has been as transformational as Lionel Messi, who is on this year's allstar roster. In July 2023, he joined Inter Miami, a club that played its first game in 2020. The Argentine World Cup champion not only quickly improved the team's profile and record, but he also elevated global awareness of the MLS because of his worldwide celebrity.

How much has the MLS grown since its debut in 1996?

Even before Messi's arrival, MLS had been on the upswing. With 12.2 million fans attending games last year, MLS was the second-highest-attended global soccer league in the world, behind only the English Premier League.

MLS has a far reach with teams located across the U.S.

Since 1996, the league has tripled in size. San Diego FC became the 30th MLS club before the 2025 season, compared with just 10 clubs when the league debuted.

The number of soccer-specific stadiums is growing in the USA

All 30 MLS clubs have their own facility, and 26 are soccer-specific. Three franchises will open new stadiums in the next three years (Inter Miami in 2026, New York City FC in 2027 and Chicago Fire in 2028). It's a far cry from 1996, when there were no stadiums and no club training facilities.

Some MLS franchises crack $1 billion mark

Another significant area of growth has been franchise value: Five MLS teams are valued at more than $1 billion, and 14 others are among the top 50 most valuable soccer clubs in the world, according

Los Angeles FC ($1.28 billion), Inter Miami ($1.19 billion), LA Galaxy ($1.11 billion), Atlanta United ($1.08 billion) and New York City FC ($1 billion) are the most valuable MLS franchises.

MLS has succeeded in drawing international talent

When the league made its debut in 1996, most of the 239 active players were American.

The majority today are still American, but the league is drawing more international talent.

MLS Cup championships by team

D.C. United won the MLS Cup in the first season; since then, 15 teams have won the title.

"I think our league is going to continue to grow," Major League Soccer Commissioner Don Garber told USA TODAY Sports before the 2025 season be-

"Every time I'm asked that question, and I say, 'Here's what it will look like five years from now.' I underestimate where we're going to be.

"At some point we're going to be celebrating just generations of Major League Soccer for fans here in the United States, Canada and around the world that love our league."

influential international arrivals, attendance growth, the stadium movement that has swept the league and how MLS fandom is growing faster among Hispanics than any other demographic group. We take a closer look at how David Beckham and Lionel Messi have lifted it to new heights and catch up with Tom Braun, the chief operating officer of the LA Galaxy and how he's creating a familyfriendly extravaganza at games. Plus, MLS has gone from no programming for kids to a feeder system that creates future pros. Where might your son or daughter fit into its offerings? And what exciting steps are next for the league with the men's World Cup arriving next summer? You can buy the edition on a newsstand or order it at onlinestore.usatoday.com
