thy and Marquise “Hollywood” Brown, but having a quick study at receiver will no doubt help Kansas City if the group gets hit by injuries again.

Las Vegas Raiders: CB Darien Porter

With Pete Carroll, Geno Smith and Ashton Jeanty all coming aboard in the last seven months, the Raiders don't seem far off from a return to relevance. But a shaky secondary could put a ceiling on any potential year one turnaround. A third-round pick out of Iowa State, Porter is competing with 2024 fourth-round pick Decamerion Richardson for the starting spot opposite veteran Eric Stokes. At 6-3 and 195 pounds with 4.3-second speed in the 40-yard dash, the former wide receiver fits the bill of the hyperathletic project Carroll covets at cornerback – though Richardson does as well. With only seven career starts at the position, Porter has ground to make up for as he tries to acclimate to NFL coverage schemes. But with Las Vegas sending Jakorian Bennett to Philadelphia this week, it's clear Porter will play a crucial role as a rookie even if he doesn't start right away.

Los Angeles Chargers: WR Tre' Harris

A speedy rookie receiver emerging in camp as a deep threat for the Chargers came as no surprise. Many, however, assumed Harris would be the one to stand out, but fifth-rounder KeAndre Lambert-Smith has had the hotter start. Harris was held without a catch in the Hall of Fame Game, and Keenan Allen's return could spell trouble in a suddenly crowded receiver room. There's still time to build momentum heading into the season, but with only so many targets to go around in a run-heavy attack, Harris could get lost in the shuffle as a rookie if he can't get up to speed in a hurry.

Los Angeles Rams: RB Blake Corum

Sean McVay sits his starters in the preseason, preferring instead to place a greater emphasis on joint practices. If the head coach isn't putting much stock into his team's exhibitions, then you shouldn't either. But even after Kyren Williams struck a three-year, $33 million contract extension this week, the backfield remains a point of interest for the Rams. With fourth-rounder Jarquez Hunter potentially applying some pressure as a more explosive option, Corum has to string together some strong showings after the third-round pick logged just 207 yards on 58 carries as a rookie.

Miami Dolphins: CB Cam Smith

Trading Jalen Ramsey to the Steelers left the Dolphins' collection of cornerbacks in a perilous spot. Losing Artie Burns and Kader Kohou to a torn ACL sent the group into full-on crisis. Miami seemed to recognize the urgency of the matter, trading on immediate contributors in Jack Jones on the outside and Mike Hilton at nickel. But the moves also underscored their in-house options, including Smith, a 2023 second-round pick who landed on injured reserve twice last year after barely making a dent as a rookie. Both coach Mike McDaniel and general manager Chris Grier pointed to Smith's inability to stay on the field as a major hindrance to his development, and the cornerback once again has been sidelined in camp with a lower body injury. With decision-makers' patience already wearing thin, Smith can't afford to be a nonfactor much longer.

Minnesota Vikings: QB J.J. McCarthy

A player uniquely positioned to elicit overreactions has now reached the peak of hyperbole season. Beware any definitive assessments of McCarthy at this time, as the 2024 first-round pick and the Vikings staff are still calibrating the quarterback's risk tolerance amid an unprecedented transition behind center for a 14-win team. But the mixed outings throughout camp add even more intrigue for how one of the most fascinating players in the league will handle his next challenge. Facing off against Brian Flores' vexing defenses should leave McCarthy well-situated to handle far less complicated looks from opponents in exhibitions, but there's little question that Minnesota's staff hopes both the signal-caller and the offense find their footing in short order.

New England Patriots: RB TreVeyon Henderson

Much of the Patriots' offseason efforts have focused on putting Drake Maye more at ease as well as creating more explosive plays for the second-year quarterback. With the addition of Henderson, those goals are intertwined. The second-round pick out of Ohio State is adept at ripping off long gains when given a runway. As both a runner and receiver, he gives the offense a chance to pick up yardage in chunks without forcing Maye to hold onto the ball for long, which could be a problem for a signal-caller safeguarded by two likely rookie starters in left tackle Will Campbell and left guard Jared Wilson. Expect Rhamondre Stevenson to begin the season as the lead run game option given his standing as the steadier presence, but Henderson is clearly trending up as one of the few figures capable of changing the complexion of the offense.

New Orleans Saints: QB Tyler Shough

For much of the summer, it seemed a foregone conclusion that the Saints' starting quarterback job would go to Shough, the second-round rookie out of Louisville. But Spencer Rattler has kept this an earnest competition, and the incumbent starter might even have a few built-in advantages. If Shough is to stake a claim to the job, the first preseason game might have to be the platform to do it. Decisiveness could be a sticking point for the 6-5, 219-pounder, so operating quickly in live action will be paramount for his development.

New York Giants: QB Jaxson Dart

Unlike most others on this list, Dart doesn't stand to gain much in the immediate future with Russell Wilson firmly entrenched as the Giants starter. That gives the quarterback rare latitude for experimentation in the preseason and training camp, as the first-rounder can feel his way through things without the same level of scrutiny that other passers might face. Make no mistake, though: How Dart fares will surely factor into the inevitable questions surrounding Wilson's job security at the first sign of trouble.

New York Jets: QB Justin Fields

First-year coach Aaron Glenn might be reticent to leave Fields in the line of fire for long, especially after the brief scare last week with the quarterback suffering a dislocated toe. But with Gang Green's passing offense has yet to click in training camp, getting in more work could serve the unit well. Whatever action Fields does see likely won't reflect a realistic approximation of the offense's capabilities, as the Jets might not want to fully unleash his running ability in this setting given the potential for injuries. But Glenn has extolled the virtues of getting the ball out quickly, and any opportunity for Fields to work on speeding up his decision-making is one New York should pounce on. Fields has bought into that mentality, saying Aug. 5 the offense should play in each preseason game to clean up several issues.

Philadelphia Eagles: CB Kelee Ringo

The immediate star turns of Quinyon Mitchell and Cooper DeJean assuaged many fears about the future of Philadelphia's secondary. But the air of invincibility that has cloaked Howie Roseman's roster – and specifically Vic Fangio's defense – could be challenged by how the team fills the vacancy at outside corner left by Darius Slay Jr.'s release. Since he surprisingly tumbled to the fourth round in 2023, Ringo hasn't managed to harness his considerable physical tools and become a trustworthy coverage presence. That's left the door open for Adoree' Jackson to secure the open starting spot, and the trade for Jakorian Bennett might make the competition even more heated.

Pittsburgh Steelers: QB Aaron Rodgers

Who else could it be? There's only so many reps that the four-time NFL MVP has been able to squeeze in since signing with Pittsburgh just before mandatory minicamp, so this stretch holds a rare level of importance to both the 41-year-old and his team. Rodgers has applauded offensive coordinator Arthur Smith for being flexible with his scheme, but there's still plenty to sort out before the passing attack can truly take flight. The all-important deep ball connection with fellow offseason addition DK Metcalf seems to be a work-in-progress at best, and handling pressure remains a potential pain point given the problems that dogged Rodgers with the Jets last season.

San Francisco 49ers: RB Jordan James

Everything appears to be trending in the right direction for Christian McCaffrey's comeback bid. Yet the outlook behind him on the depth chart seems substantially less clear. Backup Isaac Guerendo is expected to miss a few weeks with a shoulder injury. That could open the door for James, a fifth-round pick out of Oregon, to carve out a place for himself in the backfield. James' no-nonsense running style makes him an enticing fit for Kyle Shanahan's scheme, and he could further endear himself to the offensive staff if he continues to impress both as a runner and pass blocker.

Seattle Seahawks: TE Elijah Arroyo

The offseason remaking of Seattle's pass-catching crew didn't stop at the outset of training camp, as the team decided to part ways with starting tight end Noah Fant. While AJ Barner's strong blocking gives him a leg up to take over as the starter for an offense that will be rooted in the run game, Arroyo still could be on track to make hefty contributions than many expected of him in year one. After averaging 16.9 yards per catch in his final season at Miami, the 6-5, 250-pounder sizes up as the seam threat needed to complement Jaxon Smith-Njigba and Cooper Kupp. He could be a significant asset to Sam Darnold.

Tampa Bay Buccaneers: WR Emeka Egbuka

Taking a receiver with the No. 19 overall pick seemed like a luxury for a team that returns Mike Evans, Chris Godwin and 2024 third-round pick Jalen McMillan. Egbuka, however, has stood out so starkly during the spring and summer that it might be difficult for the Buccaneers to keep him off the field in his rookie campaign. General manager Jason Licht said Egbuka has been “everything we thought plus some,” and the 6-0, 202-pounder has drawn rave reviews from teammates and coaches alike for his advanced route running and awareness. The preseason could allow him to showcase some of that polish, though Tampa Bay might not feel compelled to give him an extensive run given how far along he already is.

Tennessee Titans: QB Cam Ward

The No. 1 overall pick is unquestionably the main – and potentially sole – attraction for the Titans this season. But even with a smattering of big plays to show what the unit is capable of, Tennessee's offense seems to have a long way to go before things click. Ward offered a frank and Gen Z-appropriate assessment of the group earlier this week, calling it “very mid.” After being plagued by Will Levis' rampant turnovers and sacks last season, coach Brian Callahan is no doubt eager to establish some level of consistency from the attack. For Ward, then, the primary measure of preseason success might be whether the unit can sync up its timing after seeming out of sorts in the early going.

Washington Commanders: WR Jaylin Lane

Washington's well-rounded and veteran-laden roster seems robust at most spots ... except wide receiver. Now, a group that was already being propped up by Terry McLaurin looks iffy amid the two-time Pro Bowler's contract standoff and Noah Brown's minimal action. While the two and Deebo Samuel Sr. should carry the passing attack once the season starts, the preseason should provide a chance for the Commanders to build depth. Lane, a fourth-round pick out of Virginia Tech, has impressed early with his blistering deep speed, which he should be able to leverage on special teams. More progress in the preseason for the 5-10, 196-pounder might put Washington a bit more at ease about its ability to navigate hits to this group.

Venus' Barbie pushes equal pay

Cydney Henderson
USA TODAY

When Mattel approached Venus Williams to make her own Barbie for the Inspiring Women Series, the American tennis legend was given free rein to select any outfit to be immortalized in.

Williams, whose résumé is as long as her 6-foot-1 frame, had many moments to choose from throughout her trailblazing career. She could've selected the first of her seven Grand Slam singles titles at Wimbledon in 2000 or opted to memorialize her first of four Olympic gold medals at the Sydney Games that same year. Williams could've even took it back to the 1999 French Open, where she won the first of her 14 Grand Slam doubles titles with her little sister Serena Williams in their iconic braids and colorful beads.

But Williams ultimately selected her win at the 2007 Wimbledon tournament, and not for the reason you may think. It was the first year the women's and men's singles champions earned equal prize money at Wimbledon, a cause that Williams championed long before her win.

"Wimbledon 2007 was a huge moment in my career – not just because I won, but because of what was happening off the court," Williams told USA TODAY Sports ahead of her Barbie's release on Aug. 15. "Championing for equal prize money wasn't just about me, it was about pushing for change for all women in sports. To see that moment honored with a Barbie doll is incredibly special. I hope it inspires young girls to speak up, believe in themselves, and know they have the power to change the game too."

'My Barbie doll told my story'

Williams said seeing her own Barbie marked a "full-circle moment." When she didn't have a tennis racket in her hand during her early years training alongside her father, Richard Williams, and Serena, Venus channeled her creative energy into giving her dolls one-of-a-kind makeovers.

"I've always loved being creative; even as a kid, I used to sew clothes for my dolls," Williams recalled. "Seeing (my) finished doll was so surreal – it made me realize this doll represents something much bigger. It's about inspiring young girls they can dream big and break barriers too."

Breaking barriers is Williams' specialty. Two years before she triumphantly hoisted Wimbledon's Rosewater Dish for the fourth time in 2007, Williams met with officials from Wimbledon and the French Open. They were the two Grand Slams that didn't pay equal prize money at the time. When no change came from the meeting, Williams refused to leave the ball in the officials' court. She penned an article in The Times, a London newspaper, at the start of the 2006 tournament titled: "Wimbledon has sent me a message: I'm only a second class champion."

Williams' article was the catalyst for Wimbledon and the French Open to change. Both tournaments announced equal prize money for all competitors, beginning in 2007. Williams went on to win her sixth major singles title at Wimbledon that year and was the first woman to win the same purse as male champion Roger Federer.

"My advice to any woman, not just advocating for equal pay but also advocating for themselves, is this: always bet on yourself and keep pushing, no matter how tough it gets," Williams told USA TODAY Sports. "There's so much power in believing in yourself. When you use your voice, you create space for others to speak up too and that can create real change."

Collaborated 'closely' on Barbie

Williams' Barbie is wearing a two-piece white set identical to what she wore to defeat France's Marion Bartoli, 6-4, 6-1, in the 2007 Wimbledon final.

Her "Inspiring Women Series" doll also features Williams' accessories from the match, including her green gem necklace, dangly earrings, wristbands and visors, in addition to Reebok tennis shoes. (She signed a multimillion-dollar deal with Reebok in 1995 at age 14 after walking away from Nike because she believed she could earn more, as depicted in the 2021 biopic, "King Richard.")

Don't forget about her racket and tennis ball.

"Venus chose that outfit herself actually, so she collaborated really closely with our talented Barbie design team," Krista Berger, senior vice president of Barbie and global head of dolls at Mattel, told USA TODAY Sports. "They (worked) closely throughout the entire process of designing the doll to ensure it accurately reflected her appearance and her personal style."

Berger said Williams' involvement with creating her own Barbie "added that personal touch to capture her impact as an athlete and an advocate. It's a moment that's important not only for the sport, for women, for fans, but to Venus personally."

What's next for Venus?

The release of Williams' Barbie doll comes days ahead of the 2025 US Open, where Williams is teaming up with fellow American Reilly Opelka in mixed doubles.

She recently returned to tennis competition for the first time in 16 months at the D.C. Open in July.

"Coming back to D.C. reminded me how much I truly love this game," Williams said. "I've always stayed true to myself and played on my own terms. For me, excellence has no limits – I play because I love the process, and fully embrace each moment."

Williams, 45, earned a straight sets victory over world No. 35 Peyton Stearns in the opening round to become the oldest player to win a tour-level sin-

Elizabeth Flores
USA TODAY

The "Barbie Inspiring Women Series" continues to honor courageous women who have taken risks, changed the rules, and paved the way for generations of girls to dream big.

Tennis icon Venus Williams will be honored with her own doll, available beginning Aug. 15 at the Mattel Shop.

Williams collaborated with the brand to create a Barbie that reflects her appearance and wears the outfit she donned during her 2007 Grand Slam tournament win at Wimbledon, where she advocated for equal pay for male and female singles winners.

Williams has also campaigned against the broader issue of the gender pay gap, particularly for women of color, and her efforts have raised awareness. She encourages women to advocate for themselves and to recognize their worth.

"Growing up, I was taught early on that anything is possible with hard work and perseverance. That belief has guided me to break barriers and use my platform to champion causes like equal pay – not just for myself, but for those who come after me," Williams said. "Being honored as a Barbie Inspiring Woman is incredibly special. I hope this doll encourages young people to dream big, know their worth, and pursue their goals with confidence and heart."

The Venus Williams Barbie doll will cost $38.

Barbie Club 59 members can purchase the doll starting at 9 p.m. ET on Aug. 14.

Barbie Club 59 is a premium membership for members of Mattel Creations for $9.99 a year, offering access to members-only dolls, priority windows for select public sales, confidential Barbie content and the opportunity to vote on the design of new dolls and other Barbie products.

gles match since 2004. Williams fell short in the second round against Magdalena Frech and made a quick, first-round exit at the Cincinnati Open, but she nonetheless celebrated being able to play "healthier than ever."

"Reconnecting with that feeling, along with the energy and support of the fans, was truly something special," Williams added.
