COLLEGE FOOTBALL WEEK 2 GAMES TO WATCH

Oklahoma-Michigan showdown leads way

Eddie Timanus USA TODAY

College football's opening act, with a rare trio of top-10 clashes, was going to be hard to top. But as the saying goes, one should not let the perfect be the enemy of the good.

The Week 2 slate is admittedly lighter on marquee matchups. There is still, however, a lot to like for your viewing entertainment on Saturday, Sept. 6. In addition to another showdown of big-name programs from the two premier conferences, there's a fierce in-state trophy game, a renewal of another heated rivalry, and a couple of other pairings that could provide more intrigue than one might surmise. Here's a look at our picks for the best games to watch.

No. 13 Michigan at No. 24 Oklahoma

Time/TV: 7:30 p.m. ET, ABC.

Why watch: The day's lone ranked matchup features two proud programs looking to bounce back after disappointing seasons. The Wolverines did finish last year with wins against Ohio State and Alabama but had fallen well out of Big Ten contention by then. The Sooners endured a rough first ride through the SEC but bigger things are expected in 2025. Much-ballyhooed Oklahoma transfer QB John Mateer got off to a quick start against Illinois State, with WR Keontez Lewis emerging as his primary target. The Michigan secondary, backed by hard-hitting DB Brandyn Hillman, will be tougher to solve. Freshman signal-caller Bryce Underwood passed a slightly tougher test for the Wolverines in his first start against New Mexico, with huge ground support from RB Justice Haynes. They'll be facing a tough Sooners' front seven, led by LBs Kip Lewis and Sammy Omosigho.

Why it could disappoint: This might be another case of the defenses being ahead of the offenses, so if you were underwhelmed by the lack of scoring in Ohio State-Texas last week, this might not be the game for you. But it should be worth the payoff if that results in more fourth-quarter drama, so don't give up too quickly.

Iowa at No. 18 Iowa State

Time/TV: Noon ET, Fox.

Why watch: The annual clash for the Cy-Hawk Trophy rarely lacks drama. It has added intrigue this year with both these heartland squads hoping to make noise in their respective conferences. The Cyclones, already with a Big 12 win in hand, want to make it back to the league title tilt. The Hawkeyes, long known for tough defense, look to play sleeper in the Big Ten with an upgraded passing game. Iowa State QB Rocco Becht has been efficient if not overly flashy with his aerial game, taking advantage of TEs Gabe Burkle and Benjamin Brahm in the red zone. The Hawkeyes LB corps, with veterans Karson Sharar and Jaden Harrell now in starting roles, must be ready. New Iowa QB Mark Gronowski wasn't asked to do much in the Week 1 tune-up against Albany, and he'll likely try to stretch the field more this time to give promising freshman RB Xavier Williams room to operate. That won't be easy against the Cyclones solid secondary, anchored by DB Jamison Patton.

Why it could disappoint: Again, there aren't likely to be a lot of aerial fireworks in this one with the strong defensive units figuring to get the better of things. But that means a blowout either way is unlikely, so expect another down-to-the-wire finish.

No. 14 Ole Miss at Kentucky

Time/TV: 3:30 p.m. ET, ABC.

Why watch: Notable as the first official SEC game of the season, this contest ultimately might not figure in the league race. But the Wildcats are hopeful that it does after a down year in the conference. Ole Miss arguably has tougher games ahead but must nevertheless take this one seriously, especially after its loss in this series last year likely cost it a College Football Playoff berth. Kentucky prevailed 24-16 in its opener against Toledo, likely to be among the top teams in the Mid-American Conference. Well-traveled QB Zach Calzada had a subpar passing day but delivered a needed TD run to help the Wildcats escape. The Ole Miss attack is now in the hands of QB Austin Simmons, who was more productive but served up a couple of picks as well against overmatched Georgia State.

Why it could disappoint: Kentucky's inconsistency in the passing game must be ironed out quickly, or any early deficit the Wildcats face might prove insurmountable. The Rebels for their part would like to quiet the Kentucky crowd early.

No. 12 Illinois at Duke

Time/TV: Noon ET, ESPN.

South Florida at No. 15 Florida

Time/TV: 4:15 p.m. ET, SECN.

Why watch: What was expected to be a tune-up for the Gators on the eve of entering SEC competition got a lot more interesting after South Florida's impressive takedown of Boise State. Now the Bulls look to upend the balance of power in the Sunshine State with this opportunity and a date with Miami to follow. The best news for Florida from its opener against Long Island was that QB DJ Lagway got in some work and got out of the game quickly, and the same can be said for LB Myles Graham and his fellow first teamers on the Gators defense. The Bulls counter with veteran QB Byrum Brown, who played a clean game and ran for two scores, and LB Jhalyn Shuler, who was all over the field in the stunner against the Broncos.

Why it could disappoint: With all due respect to the Mountain West and its defending champion Boise State, a road game in the SEC represents a major step up in weight class for the Bulls. That said, the Gators haven't needed to show much yet, so it will be worth a look to see how long USF can hang around.

Kansas at Missouri

Time/TV: 3:30 p.m. ET, ESPN2.

Why watch: The Border War returns after a 14-year hiatus, and the timing seems ideal with both programs on an upward trajectory. Neither the Tigers nor the Jayhawks have been challenged in their combined three victories to date, so this figures to be a huge measuring stick game for both. Mizzou QB Beau Pribula wasted little time establishing himself in Columbia after backing up Drew Allar at Penn State. Kansas regains the services of dual-threat QB Jalon Daniels, who is finally healthy and showing how dynamic he can be. Names to know on the defensive side include Jayhawks LB Trey Lathan and Mizzou LB Josiah Trotter, who were formerly teammates at West Virginia.

Why it could disappoint: It shouldn't, but again it's hard to peg how these teams will stack up in the trenches given the lack of tangible results thus far. There was more than a little animosity between these programs when they were Big Eight rivals, but hopefully the renewal of acquaintances won't lead to fisticuffs.

COLLEGE FOOTBALL WEEK 3 GAMES TO WATCH

No. 3 Georgia at No. 15 Tennessee

Time/TV: 3:30 p.m. ET Sept. 13, ABC

Why watch: Now things get real for the Bulldogs as they open SEC competition on the road after two warm-up games. The Volunteers at least have a Power Four win on their ledger but are also facing a major up-tick in degree of difficulty. QB Gunner Stockton and the Georgia offense haven't had to use much of the play-book thus far, though RB Nate Frazier and WR Zachariah Branch have flashed their potential. LB Arion Carter and the Tennessee defense must keep the chunk plays to a minimum. Volunteers QB Joey Aguilar has quickly become a fan favorite in Knoxville, making good use of RB Star Thomas and WR Chris Brazzell II. He must beware of Bulldogs LB Raylen Wilson.

Why it could disappoint: We really don't know much about these teams at this early juncture, so it's possible one has a significant talent advantage. That seems unlikely though. This should be a four-quarter roller coaster, so let's enjoy the ride.

No. 17 Texas A&M at No. 8 Notre Dame

Time/TV: 7:30 p.m. ET Sept. 13, NBC

Why watch: The Aggies dropped their season opener last year to the Fighting Irish and now look to return the favor in South Bend, Indiana. But there might be even more on the line for Notre Dame, which already has an "L" on its record and will now need every quality win it can muster to assemble a Playoff-worthy resume without benefit of a conference championship. Fighting Irish QB C.J. Carr had a credible passing day in hostile environs in his starting debut, though many observers questioned why standout RB Jeremiyah Love wasn't utilized more against Miami. They can both expect to see a lot of Aggies LB Scooby Williams. Veteran A&M QB Marcel Reed is off to a fast start, and WR/PR K.C. Concepcion is extremely dangerous in open space. DB Jalen Stroman is a dependable last line of defense for Notre Dame.

Why it could disappoint: This wasn't exactly a track meet when these teams got together last year, so you aren't likely to see a slew of explosive plays this time, either. But it's sure to have maximum intensity, and the game-changing event could occur at any time.

No. 23 South Florida at No. 6 Miami (Florida)

Time/TV: 4:30 p.m. ET Sept. 13, The CW

Why watch: Things couldn't have gone much better to start the season for the Bulls, who look to take down a third consecutive ranked opponent. They will not catch the Hurricanes unaware, however, and Miami also has recorded one of the most notable results of the early season with that takedown of Notre Dame. USF's swarming defense, featuring LBs Jhalyn Shuler and Mac Harris, now turns its attention to Miami QB Carson Beck, who is benefiting from sure-handed targets like WRs Malachi Toney and C.J. Daniels. Bulls offensive catalyst QB Byrum Brown doesn't have as many weapons, but WR Keshawn Singleton can make opponents pay for coverage mistakes.

Why it could disappoint: The South Florida defense has effectively neutralized the first two quarterbacks it faced, but Beck might prove tougher to contain.

Florida at No. 4 LSU

Time/TV: 7:30 p.m. ET Sept. 13, ABC

Why watch: After surviving a hard-fought opener at Clemson, LSU can be forgiven for going through the motions at times against Louisiana Tech. The Tigers will need to refocus quickly for the Gators, who will be in full desperation mode. Tigers QB Garrett Nussmeier has a 68.4% completion percentage through his two games, but that number could be even better as he and his receivers have been periodically out of sync. Florida QB D.J. Lagway has moved the ball as well, but inefficiency in the red zone and a costly special-teams miscue were the undoing against South Florida.

Why it could disappoint: While there is no transitive property in football, it is fair to wonder just how strong LSU's Week 1 win really is given Clemson's subsequent issues. But it's equally fair to question the Gators' staying power in the extremely crowded SEC. It wouldn't be surprising to see sloppy execution on both sides early.

Vanderbilt at No. 10 South Carolina

Time/TV: 7:45 p.m. ET Sept. 13, SECN

Why watch: In a Week 3 rarity, the Gamecocks and Commodores kick off SEC play having already faced a common opponent. Both picked up non-league victories at the expense of Virginia Tech. Vanderbilt's performance was arguably more impressive, as they scored the last 34 points of the game. WR Tre Richardson has stepped up to provide a complementary outside target to TE Eli Stowers on the inside for Vandy QB Diego Pavia. Gamecocks QB LaNorris Sellers hasn't been quite as accurate thus far, but Vicari Swain has provided a scoring boost with three TDs on punt returns.

Why it could disappoint: It shouldn't. The Gamecocks might still have the edge at the line of scrimmage, but Vandy cannot be dismissed as the SEC's perennial doormat.

No. 11 Clemson at Georgia Tech

Time/TV: Noon ET Sept. 13, ESPN

Why watch: The ACC favorite Tigers are in an odd place as they embark on league play, following up that tough loss to LSU with a near disaster against Troy. Georgia Tech fans might actually feel better about their team's position with a road victory at Colorado and a tune-up in hand. The Clemson passing game has been unexpectedly pedestrian, with WR Bryant Wesco providing most of the downfield presence for QB Cade Klubnik thus far. The Yellow Jackets air defense, backed by DB Omar Daniels, has been sound despite still looking for its first interception of the season. Georgia Tech standout dual-threat QB Haynes King sat out the Gardner-Webb game with a lower body injury but should be ready to go.

Why it could disappoint: This might be yet another defensive slog for the Tigers, and points might be at even more of a premium if King isn't at full speed for Tech.

Arkansas at No. 13 Ole Miss

Time/TV: 7 p.m. ET Sept. 13, ESPN

Theegala healthy in time for PGA Tour Fall

Adam Schupak

Golfweek | USA TODAY NETWORK

NAPA, CA – Sahith Theegala was at the BMW Championship last month for all the wrong reasons.

One year after finishing third at the Tour Championship, Theegala failed to qualify for the FedExCup Playoffs and was only at Caves Valley Golf Club for a sponsor appearance with Hero Motors Co. The only golf he would be playing there would be a hit and giggle about an hour away at Congressional Country Club that his manager organized rather than at Caves Valley, the tournament site.

"Not going to lie," he said of being outside the ropes at one of the PGA Tour's Playoff events, "it's depressing to be here."

But Theegala arrives at Silverado Resort, the site of his lone PGA Tour title, with renewed enthusiasm this week. He says he is 100% healthy and there's still time to make highlights this fall.

Theegala's season was sidetracked by multiple injuries. First, he hurt his oblique in February while moving homes (though he did hire movers for the heavy lifting) and it bothered him throughout the West Coast Swing.

He was hesitant to mention that it became a growing concern after swinging at a screen while competing in a TGL event ahead of the Arnold Palmer Invitational in March. Aiming for land on a wildly imagined island fairway hole, he let loose, attempting to carry the water. "It was all on me. I get so amped up. I hit ball speeds that I don't hit ever on the golf course," he explained. "I was swinging hard all day and I swung extra hard on that one. I actually piped it, but I felt a pop right when I swung."

A spasm shot through his oblique like a spring coming unwound. But he played on through the Masters rather than getting checked out. "I kept playing golf as if it was nothing for about three weeks," he said. "Even after I saw a doctor, it was not bad enough where I couldn't play. So I kept playing on."

Soon, the pain shifted to a second area. He recalled doing several exercises where he was pinning his shoulders back. His neck began bothering him as he tried to make compensations with his swing.

"I don't know how I played Saturday at Truist," said Theegala, who shot 78 and withdrew before the final round of one of the tour's signature events in May.

The 27-year-old out of Pepperdine University had no choice but to sit out the PGA Championship and U.S. Open, but he refused to miss the British Open, too. He gave it a valiant try but knew he lacked both sufficient prep time for that major and hadn't returned to full strength. He missed the cut at Royal Portrush and in all of his four most recent starts dating to the Memorial in May, only breaking par once in his last eight rounds.

He enters the FedExCup Fall ranked 147th in the

Why watch: Ole Miss got the win it needed at Kentucky last week to kick off its SEC slate. The Rebels now return home to take on the Razorbacks, who took care of their pre-conference business and now hope to make more noise in the league after some down years. Ole Miss QB Austin Simmons has been a bit too free with the ball at times, but RB Kewan Lacy and WR Harrison Wallace III are constant big-play threats. Arkansas counters with veteran QB Taylen Green, who has already accounted for 11 total TDs against overmatched competition.

Why it could disappoint: The Rebels offense hasn't fired on all cylinders yet, but the Razorbacks defense hasn't really been challenged either. If Ole Miss does make it a runaway, Arkansas fans can probably brace for a long year.

Wisconsin at No. 18 Alabama

Time/TV: Noon ET Sept. 13, ABC

Why watch: Hanging 73 on Louisiana-Monroe might have been therapeutic for the Crimson Tide, but it couldn't erase the Florida State loss. They'll need a strong showing in this one before diving into SEC play, but the Badgers hope to send a message that the Big Ten is just as competitive. WR Germie Bernard has emerged as Alabama QB Ty Simpson's most reliable target. The Badgers' active LB tandem of Christian Alliegro and Sebastian Cheeks will lead the effort to disrupt their timing. Wisconsin QB Billy Edwards Jr. is unlikely to return from an ankle injury, which would leave the offense in the hands of Danny O'Neil. In either case, the Badgers will rely on their ground game to control the clock.

Why it could disappoint: The Badgers might not have the speed weapons to take advantage, but if Alabama doesn't remove the suspense from this one quickly, the temperature in Tuscaloosa will be dialed up even further.
