Detroit win tops Kirkwood’s weekend

Christian Romo

Detroit Free Press
USA TODAY NETWORK

Andretti Global racer Kyle Kirkwood felt a whole lot of emotions in the days leading up to the NTT IndyCar Series’ Detroit Grand Prix.

There was the shock of Will Power locking onto the back of his car during a practice run on May 30.

There was the disappointment of finishing in third place during qualifying.

Kirkwood even said “I don’t care” while looking very much like he cared after the Power dustup.

But after winning the Detroit Grand Prix on June 1, Kirkwood got to add joy to his weekend of big feelings.

“I’ve gotten every emotion that I’ve ever had in motorsports across the past 10 days, no doubt about it,” he said. “So that’s motor racing for you.”

Kirkwood’s Grand Prix win capped off a nearly flawless weekend, where he finished with the best lap in the first practice round May 30, finished third in qualifying May 31 (even though he says he “kind of threw it away a little bit” during that round) and will go home with the biggest trophy of the weekend.

“It’s rare that you go into weekends like this in IndyCar, where you feel like you have a car that is 100% capable of winning in every situation that you have, and you don’t want that to go to waste,” he said.

But Kirkwood knows all too well that any NTT IndyCar Series driver, especially on such an unpredictable street course like Detroit’s, can fall behind even with a flawless strategy.

He pointed to Colton Herta, who finished third despite outracing his competitors for most of the weekend and qualifying for the pole position for the big race.

“I’ll be honest, I think Colton was

Herta said he was happy with his third-place finish despite the disappointment of giving up positions during the race.

“I think we ended up choosing the right strategy, and I was happy with how we did everything with the tires,” he said. “Wish we could get two more positions, but maybe (we can) in two weeks.”

Kirkwood has raced in the Detroit Grand Prix three times and has improved his final position in each race, finishing 25th in 2022, sixth in 2023 and fourth in 2024.

somewhat robbed of a win here today,” Kirkwood said. “He’s done everything right this weekend, he got the pole, he led the beginning portion of the race, and then he just got caught on cold

After previously winning the Grand Prix of Long Beach this season, Kirkwood was asked if he’s become a street racing specialist.

“I wish I knew,” Kirkwood said. “I wish I knew why or how to translate it, or if it does translate to other places, because weekends like this (are) what we need to win a championship.”

But approaching halfway through the IndyCar Series season and still many points behind the championship leader Álex Palou, Kirkwood has plenty of time to ruminate on how to make that happen.

As for the break after a chaotic month, Kirkwood will likely indulge in a feeling he likely didn’t feel much of the past week: relaxation.

“I just want to get home. It’s been a long month for everyone,” he said. “Now we get a week off, and I hope everyone out there and enjoy it as much as possible. “I know I will.”

NASCAR CUP SERIES NASHVILLE WINNERS AND LOSERS

Ryan Blaney wins Cracker Barrel 400

Nick Gray

The Nashville Tennessean
USA TODAY NETWORK

Ryan Blaney took control of the race with a pass for the lead on the restart with 116 laps to go, then drove to his first victory of the NASCAR Cup Series season in the Cracker Barrel 400 on June 1 at Nashville Superspeedway.

Blaney won Stage 2 but dropped behind Joey Logano after pit stops at the stage break. Blaney then drove by Logano on a restart on lap 199 and held the top spot for the majority of the final 100 laps.

The final pit cycle completed under green, with Blaney holding a sizable lead over second-place Carson Hocevar and third-place Denny Hamlin.

Hocevar finished in second for the second time this season, tying his career-best finish in the Cup Series.

Winner: Carson Hocevar

Hocevar is a future star in the sport, and always a part of the story. The race had the best and worst of Hocevar, all in 300 laps.

In Stage 2, Hocevar drove hard into turn 3 and bumped Ricky Stenhouse Jr., sending the No. 47 Chevrolet spinning and into the wall. Stenhouse did not finish, credited with 39th, then told Amazon in an interview that retribution could be coming.

But Hocevar finished the second stage in the top 10, then worked the strategy late to end up second after the final pit cycle completed with about 30 laps to go.

Hocevar couldn’t cut into Blaney’s lead at the end but was able to hold off Hamlin to finish second. It ties a runner-up finish at Atlanta earlier this season as his career best in the Cup Series.

Winner: Bubba Wallace

Bubba Wallace needed a good finish badly but probably did not think he would get one early in the race.

Wallace was penalized for speeding on the first stop of the race, on lap 44. He lost a lap and wasn’t able to get it back at the stage end.

Wallace did get the free pass on lap 104 as a group of cautions helped the bottom of the running order, then steadily climbed the leaderboard.

The No. 23 Toyota entered the top 10

Ryan Blaney celebrates winning the Cracker Barrel 400.

ANDREW NELLES/THE NASHVILLE TENNESSEAN

early in the final stage, and Wallace drove up into sixth on the final run.

Wallace entered Nashville with three straight did not finishes (DNFs), dropping out of the top 10 in points. But the result June 1 should help Wallace and his 23XI Racing team reset positively as the second half of the Cup Series regular season begins this month.

Loser: Alex Bowman

Alex Bowman’s stretch of poor finishes continued after wrecking alongside Noah Gragson early in Stage 2.

Bowman’s 36th-place finish is his fifth finish of 29th or worse in the last seven races, and it puts into question his playoff status with 12 regular-season races left.

To give context on Bowman’s struggles: He finished second at Homestead and was third in points through six races. After Nashville, Bowman is in 12th in points.

Loser: Ricky Stenhouse Jr.

Stenhouse was on the receiving end of Hocevar’s too-aggressive bumping on lap 106. (That incident comes up a couple of times, doesn’t it?)

The No. 47 Chevrolet was a model of consistency throughout the first 13 races, coming into Nashville at 13th in points despite just two top-10 finishes but no finishes outside the top 25.

But Hocevar’s contact sent Stenhouse into the wall, out of the race and down the standings and the playoff picture.

COLLEGE BASEBALL COMMENTARY

No. 1 Vanderbilt ends strong season weakly

Gentry Estes

The Nashville Tennessean
USA TODAY NETWORK

If you happen to see the Vanderbilt baseball team from the past few weeks, the one that won an epic series in Knoxville, swept through the SEC Tournament and earned the NCAA Tournament’s No. 1 overall seed, please notify someone on campus. People are looking for those Commodores.

Most of them weren’t at the NCAA Regional at Hawkins Field in Nashville, Tennessee.

Most of the Commodores hitters who did show up in their uniforms to lose two games in three days, ending a strong season in the weakest of fashions, were strangers.

They didn’t just play poorly. They played tight and timid and terrified of the moment. The opposite of this season’s famously clutch performances, these Commodores wanted zero smoke. They wilted in the hazy pressure, and it only got worse as that pressure increased.

A weekend that started alarming, with a close call in a 4-3 comeback victory over Wright State, turned disappointing with a 3-2 loss to Louisville, dropping Vanderbilt into the losers’ bracket. Then it just got embarrassing the next afternoon, with Wright State plating four runs in the first inning and withstanding a late rally to hold on for a 5-4 victory in an elimination game, putting Vanderbilt out of its misery.

And, truly, this was misery for any Vanderbilt fan unfortunate enough to be there to witness it.

The top-seeded Commodores played 27 innings, and they trailed in all but one. Their pitching and defense, for the most part, was solid enough.

But offensively? Haha.

In the opener, the Commodores were no-hit for six innings by a Wright State pitcher, Cam Allen, with an ERA above 5. Against Louisville, they didn’t have an extra-base hit or an RBI. Then, in the saddest of them all, Vanderbilt was silenced by another Raiders pitcher, Griffen Paige, who opened the game with an ERA of 8.90. Paige allowed one hit – ONE! – in eight innings.

For the regional, Vanderbilt batted .132 and didn’t get its first hit of the regional with a runner in scoring position until down to its final out in the final game. Prior to that, Vanderbilt started the regional 0-for-14 with runners in scoring position.

Bad luck. Bad at-bats. Bad swings.

Vanderbilt’s R.J. Hamilton sits in the dugout after the 5-4 loss to Wright State. MARK ZALESKI/THE TENNESSEAN

Bad everything.

Such a thorough humbling for the tournament’s No. 1 overall seed, while stunning, would’ve been even more so if it didn’t continue a rough narrative for the home team.

This NCAA Tournament is no longer the Commodores’ playground. It’s now their house of horrors.

Since losing in the College World Series’ final game in 2021, Vanderbilt has failed to make it out of an opening regional for four consecutive years and counting. Its record in NCAA games the past three years is 2-6 (four losses were at Hawkins Field) and there are losses to Xavier, High Point and Wright State.

Last season’s 0-for-2 showing in an NCAA regional (including that High Point loss) seemed a turning point for a declining Vanderbilt program that appeared to get its act together in 2025.

These Commodores were a good team that had some good moments. Most notably, they regained control of the in-state rivalry against Tennessee, punctuating it with a blowout win over the Vols in the SEC Tournament. The No. 1 seed was a nice, surprise bonus, too.

But in college baseball, none of it means much without success at the end of the season. And that is when Vanderbilt’s baseball program has picked up a habit of shrinking from the challenge.

This was a priceless opportunity to change the narrative by proving otherwise.

Instead, with Vanderbilt’s regional embarrassment of 2025, that narrative is stronger than ever. And it’s impossible to dispute.

MLB POWER RANKINGS

Free-falling Phillies lose MVP to injury

Gabe Lacques
USA TODAY

The Philadelphia Phillies can't win. And Bryce Harper can't swing.

Once comfortably perched atop the National League East, the Phillies are in danger of losing touch with the New York Mets and falling into a deep thicket of NL playoff contenders.

With nine losses in 10 games going into June 9 and franchise slugger Harper tossed on the injured list (IL) with a recurring wrist injury, the free-falling Phillies have dropped three spots in USA TODAY Sports' power rankings.

This past weekend they were swept in Pittsburgh for the first time since June 2015 and now trail the Mets by four games. Next in town? The dynamic Chicago Cubs, neck-and-neck with the Mets for the NL's best record.

1. Detroit Tigers (+1): World Series atmosphere in the D as Tigers take two of three from Cubs.

2. Chicago Cubs (+2): Rank second in the NL in defensive runs saved.

3. New York Mets (-): Pete Alonso passes David Wright for second on franchise home run list. Next: Darryl Strawberry.

4. New York Yankees (+2): Jazz Chisholm roars off the IL with eight hits in 16 at-bats.

5. Los Angeles Dodgers (-4): Tony Gonsolin latest pitcher to land on IL heap – though at least his UCL is intact.

6. San Diego Padres (+1): Score six runs yet take two of three games at Milwaukee, thanks to pair of Manny Machado homers.

7. San Francisco Giants (+1): Folk hero Late Night LaMonte Wade cut loose, but Dom Smith provides quick impact for flaccid offense.

8. Philadelphia Phillies (-3): After giving up 20 runs in two starts, Jesús Luzardo wonders if tipping pitches is to blame.

The Phillies' Bryce Harper had a .814 OPS before going on the injured list.
NICK TURCHIARO/IMAGN IMAGES

9. Houston Astros (+3): Jeremy Peña trails only Aaron Judge in AL WAR.

10. St. Louis Cardinals (-1): When it's going well: Yoshinobu Yamamoto shuts them down, but they somehow prevail.

11. Tampa Bay Rays (+6): That is 14 wins in 18 games and what's this, a playoff race?

12. Minnesota Twins (+1): Louis Var-land leads AL pitchers with 32 appearances – yet has a 0.99 WHIP.

13. Milwaukee Brewers (+1): Brandon Woodruff's rehab road hits bump after he's struck in elbow by 108-mph line drive.

14. Toronto Blue Jays (+1): George Springer's OPS-plus: 138. In 2024: 91.

15. Cleveland Guardians (-5): They sink to 24th in runs scored, once again imperiling good work of pitching staff.

16. Kansas City Royals (-): Jac Caglianone's Kauffman Stadium debut June 10 against Yankees.

17. Seattle Mariners (-6): George Kirby halts a five-game skid by striking out career-high 14.

18. Cincinnati Reds (+1): Christian Encarnacion-Strand returns from IL, homering in consecutive games.

19. Texas Rangers (-1): Jacob deGrom dominating, offense flailing. Is this the 2018 Mets?

20. Arizona Diamondbacks (+2): "Overall, I don't feel great," says manager Torey Lovullo while getting swept in Cincinnati.

21. Boston Red Sox (-1): An off day for Roman Anthony at Worcester and New England freaks out. Hey, not much else to get pumped about.

22. Washington Nationals (+1): Scored 11 runs in seven games as CJ Abrams, Keibert Ruiz slump.

23. Los Angeles Angels (+1): They scoop LaMonte Wade Jr. off the scrap heap from Giants.

24. Atlanta Braves (-3): No love from California: 0-10 mark in Golden State after Giants sweep.

25. Baltimore Orioles (+1): Colton Cowser is back, and shows why they missed him.

26. Pittsburgh Pirates: They finally win a Paul Skenes start but are 5-6 in his outings. (His ERA is 1.88.)

27. Athletics (-): When they return to Yolo County, temperatures projected to hit 96 degrees.

28. Miami Marlins (-3): After a nearly 21-month absence, Eury Perez is scheduled to make return from Tommy John surgery June 9.

29. Chicago White Sox (-): So when will that Ishbia cash kick in?

30. Colorado Rockies (-): In case they got too high from sweeping the Marlins, the Mets outscored them 25-8.
