Mikaela Shiffrin prioritizes mental health

Nancy Armour
USA TODAY

All the talent in the world isn't enough.

Not when the eyes of the world are trained on you. Not when the expectations on you are bigger than the mountain you're standing atop or the arena you're in the middle of. You can have put in thousands of hours of physical work and, still, it won't be enough. At some point, you will falter. You will be awash in doubt. Your body might even rebel against you.

The difference between overcoming it and being the peanut gallery's latest object of scorn or, worse, pity, is what else you did. The work you did mentally, to prepare yourself for this moment emotionally and psychologically as well as physically.

"Everyone used to think it's weak to be vulnerable. And it's actually quite the opposite. Anyone can mask anything. It's far more courageous to stand on stage and say, 'This is going on with me,'" said Abbey Fox, a licensed clinical psychologist who works with Mikaela Shiffrin and spoke to USA TODAY Sports with Shiffrin's permission.

The 2026 Milan Cortina Olympics provided yet another reminder that elite athletes are neither robots nor superhuman, as well as the importance they emphasize their mental health as much as their physical health and training.

Figure skater Ilia Malinin fell apart under the weight of the pressure, not even making the podium in an event he was considered a shoo-in to win. Shiffrin, having learned from her own nightmarish experience at the 2022 Beijing Olympics, was able to tune out the external noise on her way to winning gold.

"It's the mental aspect that pulls everything together. The performance aspect and delivering, that comes down to mental," Simone Biles, who has become a fierce advocate for mental health after her experience with "the twisties" at the Tokyo Summer Olympics, told USA TODAY Sports.

"It's important to let people know it's not a walk in the park," Biles added. "For me, it took more mental work than physical. It shouldn't be taken lightly."

As Shiffrin prepares for the FIS Alpine Skiing World Cup Finals that began March 21 in Lillehammer, Norway – where she could secure a record-tying sixth overall title – it's worth looking back at how she prioritized her mental health on her way to the top of the podium, and what lessons that can provide for other athletes.

Looking for quiet in her mind

Shiffrin began working with Fox after the Beijing Winter Games at the suggestion of her mother, Eileen, who is also one of her coaches.

Shiffrin, who turned 31 on March 13, has always been introspective. She has been open about her profound grief over the unexpected death of her father, Jeff, in February 2020. She has not shied away from her complicated feelings about the Olympics.

But there is a difference between giving voice to those things and giving them power.

"You have to live in a way that's true to who you are and accept the discomfort of other people not always approving and sitting in that," Fox said. "She's someone who can say now, 'That hurts me, I'm uncomfortable. And that's OK.'"

"What we try to avoid holds more power," Fox added. "If we can diffuse it, it doesn't hold power."

Shiffrin and Fox began preparing for Milan Cortina last summer. The first step was for Shiffrin to be honest about the feelings, and fears, she now has about the Olympics. With herself and then with the rest of her team.

This wasn't about putting herself back on the podium. It's quite obvious Shiffrin, whose 109 (and counting) World Cup victories are the most of any Alpine skier, knows how to win. But she is human, and nobody in their right mind would want to endure the abuse and vitriol she got in Beijing and afterward, especially from people who don't understand the nuances of the sport.

"Victory and defeat live next door to each other. What she was most afraid of was having to feel that defeat publicly again and the narratives that are out of her control," Fox said.

Fox helped Shiffrin to think of what she does (ski really fast) separately from who she is (a fiancée, a daughter, a sister, a friend, a person who likes and can play the guitar). They also worked on focusing on what she could control: That minute or so between when she left the starting gate to when she crossed the finish line. Her turns. Her skiing.

Also, to trust in her process and those who were part of it. Her coaches. Her ski techs. Her support staff. Everything else was simply background noise.

They also dug into the grief Shiffrin carries at her father not being here to see her moments of triumph. Or console her when she comes up short.

"We've done a lot of work around the duality of winning and joy coexisting with the pain of his loss. It's not this either or event," Fox said. "She didn't have to separate herself from her relationship with her father. She could include him in it despite his absence."

When Shiffrin arrived at the 2026 Winter Games, she seemed lighter. She made jokes about Beijing and talked about not being consumed by the opinions of others or elements beyond her control.

Then came the team combined.

Olympic problem back in the biggest spotlight

Shiffrin and newly minted Olympic downhill champion Breezy Johnson were paired for the event, which they'd won when it made its debut at last year's world championships. When Johnson won the downhill portion, the gold medal seemed like a given.

Except Shiffrin had an uncharacteristically slow run, finishing 15th out of 18 skiers and dropping her and Johnson to fourth.

She'd barely gotten her skis off when the criticism, and the psychoanalyzing, began.

"We had conversations around choking, freezing, the pressure of the Olympics – really the dark side of the criticism," Fox said. "We really had to get strategic about coping with whatever the world was going to have to say. That's when we shifted gears a bit."

Fox had traveled to Milan Cortina to work with Shiffrin and her entire team during the Olympics. They spent hours working through what Shiffrin was feeling and how it was holding her back.

She meditated to help her process her feelings. She (mostly) got off social media. She unsubscribed from media accounts that she knew could drag her down. She limited her circle to the people she knew had her best interests at heart.

She journaled. She wrote out mantras and stuck them on her bathroom mirror so she would see them every day.

"No matter what you do, there is always going to be someone who doesn't like something shiny. That is out of your control and focusing on it is self-torment," Fox said. "If we focus on those worries or what one critic said, it grows in our mind."

Instead, Shiffrin focused on her skiing. When she got in the start gate for the women's slalom, there were no "What ifs?" or "What will people say?" clouding her mind. Just the gates in front of her and joy that comes from carving her way down a mountain.

When she crossed the finish line, Shiffrin was Olympic champion for a third time. She won by a whopping 1.5 seconds, a gap so wide silver medalist Camille Rast was closer to the 12th-place finisher than she was to Shiffrin.

"She is just such a badass," Biles, who has become friends with Shiffrin, said, pride in her voice. "I was really proud of her. The resilience, the determination, the never giving up – people don't understand how hard it is."

"People will say, 'Wow, their comeback!' But it was really a lot of mental work, things you never wanted to talk about, wounds you never wanted to reopen," Biles said. "We had to, to get over that to have (success)."

"Don't forget about the mental work she did."

Especially when, earlier in the Games, there was yet another cautionary tale of the toll ignoring your mental health can exact.

Malinin succumbs to pressure

Biles was at figure skating the night of the men's free skate, when Malinin fell twice and landed only three of the seven quadruple jumps he'd planned. In first place after the short program, Malinin wound up eighth.

"I was so heartbroken for him because I could see the pain and heartbreak in his face and body. I felt really, really sad," Biles said.

Looking back, there were hints of the stress Malinin was feeling. Earlier at the Olympics, he spoke of having "bad days" that "really shuts me down." Biles reached out to him after the free skate, offering the wisdom of her experience and sharing with Malinin what had worked for her after Tokyo.

"I wanted him to know this isn't end all be all. You're so much more than that and so much more than your performances. That was the mindset and conversation I tried to lead with him," she said.

"I just wanted him to feel that he was still a champion," Biles added. "He's already achieved so much and to just hold your head up high. And that you're just human. (Expletive) happens."

No doubt Malinin was hearing that from others, too. But the words hit different when they come from another athlete who is the very best in their sport and has had their struggles play out in public.

There is comfort in having others understand what you're going through. "Trauma bonding," Biles called it. What would be even better is it not happening in the first place.

When athletes like Biles and Shiffrin and Malinin put a spotlight on mental health, it's a permission slip for other, lesser-accomplished athletes. When Biles talks about being in therapy – she still goes once a week – or Shiffrin peels back the curtain on her work with Fox, it normalizes adding mental health to your training regimen.

Just as weightlifting and getting massages and working with a nutritionist is now considered a basic necessity of elite-level training, Biles and Fox hope mental health will soon be seen that way, too.

"(Shiffrin) is in a position to invite others to take the risk to be uncomfortable and engage in the awkwardness, at times, of talking about mental health and talking about things that are difficult and knowing it can actually build some really powerful bridges," Fox said.

"Mikaela ... wanted to understand herself more and clear up some of the barriers that were in her way so she could re-up the athlete in her," Fox said. "Not to be stuck in it, but to learn from it."

May we all learn from it.

Elliott puts Hendrick in win column

Chris Vinel

The Daytona Beach (Florida) News-Journal
USA TODAY NETWORK

NASCAR’s trip to Martinsville Speed- way came at a good time for Hendrick Motorsports.

No, the constant contender had not turned to rubbish in the last two months, but it had not captured a NAS- CAR Cup Series victory through the first six weeks of 2026. That served as their longest winless streak to open a season since 2019.

If there was ever a perfect place to change that, it was the historic speed- way in Ridgeway, Virginia, though.

Chase Elliott grabbed the checkers in the Cook Out 400 on March 29. The win marked Hendrick’s 31st on the 0.526- mile oval, the most of any organization at any track in the sport.

Elliott led 84 laps. He held off Denny Hamlin, who dominated the first two stages before settling into the runner- up spot.

Elliott’s victory doubled as an anni- versary gift. He debuted in the Cup Se- ries on the same day at the same track 11 years ago. Now in his 11th full-time cam- paign, Elliott carries 22 career wins, including two at Martinsville. “It’s really cool when this stuff works out, and to win these races is so tough,” he said. “Just really grateful for the opportunity as always. I never take it for granted, trust me. It’s a dream come true for me.” It required some smart moves by

Elliott and a dash of luck. Alan Gustafson, the crew chief for the No. 9 Chevrolet, called for Elliott to short pit on lap 261. The strategy panned out for the duo when a caution flag on lap 312 allowed Elliott to pit again from second and remain up front. “We took a gamble,” Elliott said. “We were going to two-stop that last stage. I honestly think it was going to work out really good for us either way. Just so proud of them, man.” Hamlin looked to be doing it again. In 2025, he commanded the spring race at Martinsville, pacing everyone for 274 laps on his way to victory lane. He surpassed that total this go-round with 292 laps led. He also laid down the fastest qualifying time March 28 and snatched two stage wins in the race. It was Hamlin at his best. But following the final caution, Elliott wrestled away the lead, and Hamlin spent the rest of the race in unsuccess- ful pursuit. “He did a good job controlling the pace there,” Hamlin said. “It really came from that bad restart I had besides (Ross Chastain). Just not much really I could’ve done there, and it felt like we gave it our all.”

Palou wins as pit stop error costs Lundgaard

Zion Brown

The Indianapolis Star
USA TODAY NETWORK

LEEDS, AL – A glance at the final re- sults makes it seem like Alex Palou was unchallenged in his 13.3-second victory in IndyCar’s Children’s of Alabama Indy Grand Prix. But Palou’s winning margin is a bit misleading.

As Palou pitted for the last time at Barber Motorsports Park, Arrow McLa- ren’s Christian Lundgaard took the race lead for the second time. When Palou exited pit lane, his No. 10 Chip Ganassi Racing Honda was stuck behind the traffic of Mick Schumacher and Dennis Hauger, who were at the tail end of the lead lap.

Lundgaard managed to further his lead while Palou navigated past Schu- macher and Hauger. When Lundgaard entered his final pit stop four laps later, on lap 69, it appeared he’d end up in a battle to defeat the four-time NTT Indy- Car Series champion.

But Arrow McLaren’s pit crew had an issue securely putting the rear right tire on the No. 7 Chevrolet, causing the pit stop to take nearly 18 seconds. The blun- der essentially ended Lundgaard’s chance to win, allowing Palou to cruise through the last 22 laps with the lead.

“We had the car to win the race,” Lundgaard said. “We had the pace, we had the track position at the time. I’m not really sure what happened in the pit stop. I’m not sure I can really comment too much on it. Again, it’s unfortunate.”

Kyle Moyer, Lundgaard’s strategist at Arrow McLaren, told IndyStar that “it happens” and “we win as a team and lose as a team.”

Even after the elongated pit stop, Lundgaard passed Rahal Letterman Lanigan’s Graham Rahal on lap 88 of 90 to finish second.

Lundgaard feels it would’ve been a “fair and square fight” with Palou for the win had the error not occurred. “We finished P2, we shouldn’t be that frustrated,” he said. “But when you are up against a car that’s been the most competitive and best car in IndyCar for the past many years, to have a chance to beat him fair and square, that hurts. It’s the position that we’ve tried to be in the past three years. “I think we got there today. Really, just to miss out on it for something like that is unfortunate. I think there’s a lot of learning to take from it.” Lundgaard is in his second season with Arrow McLaren, and he’s search- ing for his first win with the team after getting his lone career victory in 2023 with Rahal Letterman Lanigan. Lund- gaard has now finished on the podium eight times since joining Arrow McLa- ren. In Lundgaard’s nine podium finishes in the last three seasons, the Danish driver has finished behind Palou eight times, including in last year’s Children’s of Alabama Indy Grand Prix. Lundgaard has repeatedly suffered from Palou’s greatness. “Every time I’m on the podium, sec- ond or third, he’s first,” Lundgaard said earlier this month, when Palou won the Grand Prix of St. Petersburg while he finished third. “It’s pretty annoying.” In St. Petersburg, Florida, Palou was truly unchallenged, unlike at Barber. This could’ve been Lundgaard’s shot to finally beat Palou, yet it ended up being déjà vu. “I feel like it would have been a very close battle and maybe would have been a race that Lundgaard could have won,” Palou said. “If you look at the result and you don’t follow the race, the timings, maybe then you look like you were so much faster than everybody else. That was not the truth.”

Lundgaard moved from seventh to third in IndyCar’s points standings, but he remains behind Palou (second) and Kyle Kirkwood (first). The 24-year-old is still in search of a significant break- through moment, despite a career-best fifth-place finish in 2025. Mishaps like the one that knocked Lundgaard out of contention are the reason Palou remains the standard in IndyCar. Just like in St. Petersburg, Pa- lou didn’t need a remarkable late lap pass to win this race. He and the CGR team just managed not to slip up, and Palou patiently made his way back to the lead after Lundgaard gained ground on him. As Lundgaard knows all too well, it takes a nearly flawless race to outdo Pa- lou. One minor mistake can completely alter the race, as it did on Sunday. Zion Brown is IndyStar’s motorsports reporter.
