Caitlin Clark of the Indiana Fever continues to set WNBA records. ANDY LYONS/GETTY IMAGES

Clark sets records before, after game

Callie Fin
USA TODAY

Caitlin Clark is stuffing the stat sheet so massively for the Indiana Fever that WNBA scorekeepers are having trouble keeping up.

The star guard had 21 points, 10 assists and seven rebounds in 24 minutes to lead the Fever (2-2) to an 89-78 win over the Seattle Storm (1-3) on May 17 at Gainbridge Fieldhouse for the team's first home win of the season.

The game was Clark's 12th with at least 20 points and 10 assists, extending her record for most in WNBA history. Veteran guard Courtney Vandersloot is in second place with 10 such games in 15 years of experience.

Clark technically set that record before the game started. She had 32 points and 10 assists in an overtime loss to the Washington Mystics on May 15, but two of those assists weren't reflected in the final box score. That was until the league updated her final stat line a few hours before the game May 17 tipped off.

With that update, Clark became the first player in WNBA history to notch multiple games with at least 30 points and 10 assists.

In her postgame press conference, Clark laughed as she admitted that setting a record and then extending it two days later "had to be a first" for her.

On Sunday, Clark became the first player in WNBA history with at least 20 points and 10 assists in fewer than 25 minutes played. It was also her fourth consecutive game with at least 20 points and five assists, which tied for the longest streak to start a season in WNBA history.

"I always take pride in being able to set my teammates up for success," Clark told reporters. "That allows our team to really get flowing, and I can do a really good job of that. I only played 23 minutes tonight, and I had 10 assists, so I think it shows the potential of what this team can do offensively."

Clark was also efficient in scoring herself, collecting her 21 points on just 10 shots. She was 2 of 4 from the 3-point line after going 3-for-16 from beyond the arc over the first two games of the season. She had early momentum, scoring 17 points in the first half.

"Sometimes as a shooter, you can overthink when things aren't going your way," Clark said of her early shooting struggles. "I knew I was going to break through at some point, and it was good to see them go in. But in my head, just telling myself to let it fly. Don't hold onto it, don't aim it, just shoot it."

Kelsey Mitchell and Sophie Cunningham added 17 points each on Sunday to help Indiana rebound from its two previous losses.

The Fever played without center Aliyah Boston, who watched from sideline for the first time in her four-year WNBA career.

Next, the Fever will face the Portland Fire on May 20 in the third game of a four-game homestand.

Dream fall short but look like clear contender vs. Aces

Meghan L. Hall
USA TODAY

ATLANTA – A short-handed Atlanta Dream team took the Las Vegas Aces to the brink of defeat.

Let's be clear. Moral victories don't exist for an organization like Atlanta that has championship goals. The team either wins or it doesn't. There's no in between. Still, Atlanta erased a 17-point deficit, outscoring Las Vegas 20-4 over the final eight minutes of regulation on May 17. That sort of late-game burst on both ends of the floor, after an underwhelming offensive game, says a lot about the Dream.

Atlanta ultimately fell 85-84 after Aces guard Chelsea Gray sank a gritty, go-ahead jumper with 3.6 seconds remaining. Gray sealed the victory with a timely steal on Dream guard Allisha Gray as time expired.

Overall, Atlanta shot 37% from the field and just 22% from 3-point range. Still, the Dream held two Aces starters scoreless and forced nine total steals as a team. Atlanta also scored 42 paint points and won the boards 45-38. The Dream were also without two of their best players, as Bri Jones has a meniscus injury and Rhyne Howard is in the concussion protocol.

"Obviously, a tough finish, but proud of the way our team stuck with it," Atlanta coach Karl Smesko said postgame. "Proud of how we competed, and I think we have a lot of room for improvement, which is really exciting for what we're capable of doing. But, obviously, that doesn't make us feel any better in this particular moment."

The down-to-the-wire matchup wasn't the first time this season Atlanta has erased a deficit of more than 15 points. On May 9, the Dream came back from down 19 points to stun Minnesota 91-90 on the road. Guard Te-Hina Paopao nailed the game-winning basket with 11 seconds remaining before Gray stuffed an Olivia Miles scoring attempt late and Angel Reese sealed the victory with a gigantic block as time expired.

"We just gotta do a better job of not getting down so much because it hurt us tonight. It didn't hurt us last game, but tonight it really did because we lost by one point after being down (19)," Paopao said postgame. "I'm super proud of our fight tonight. Just hope that we could put all four quarters together."

The Aces' Chelsea Gray drives against Te-Hina Paopao in the game against the Dream. KEVIN C. COX/GETTY IMAGES

It's not ideal for Atlanta to play from behind with double-digit deficits in multiple games. That tendency can catch up to a team at the worst possible time – hello, WNBA playoffs – if not fixed. However, Atlanta's ability to overcome the big leads shows that the Dream are more than capable of rising to the level of play required to be a championship team. It also shows that with more time together, additional reps and better execution, Atlanta can hold its own against the top teams in the league.

"I think we all want to see (that fourth-quarter resiliency) all the time," Smesko said. "The energy. The competitiveness. That was great. The more we can see that, the better ... There'll be more opportunities. This is a long season. We're gonna keep getting better. I think we have the makings of a great team."

The Dream seem to be on the same page as their coach. Paopao noted that while a team like Las Vegas is the standard for what it could be, Atlanta believes it can be its own team with its own set of standards and achievements.

"We're gonna create our own measuring stick. We have a lot of things we wanna do. We're gonna be a different team when everyone's healthy, and we get all the kinks out and get the chemistry going. We're going to create that measuring stick for other teams as well," Paopao said. "We're just excited to get a better day in and day out."

SGA repeats as NBA MVP after standout season

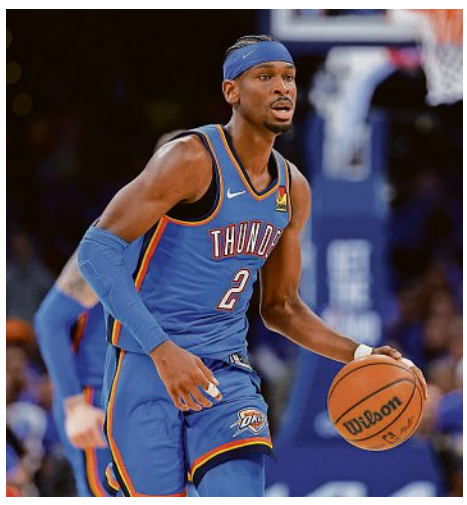

Kristie Ackert and Lorenzo Reyes
USA TODAY

Shai Gilgeous-Alexander is the NBA's Most Valuable Player. Again.

The Oklahoma City Thunder guard won his second consecutive NBA MVP award on May 17, holding off a historic run from San Antonio Spurs phenom Victor Wembanyama and another jaw-dropping season from Nikola Jokic of the Denver Nuggets.

Gilgeous-Alexander became the 14th back-to-back NBA MVP award winner in league history. The formal announcement was made on Prime Video one day before the Thunder were set to host the Spurs in Game 1 of the Western Conference finals.

"Hard work, obviously," Gilgeous-Alexander said during the Amazon Prime broadcast when asked what it took to win his second consecutive MVP trophy. "Not being satisfied. The guys in the (locker room) really having my back, night in and night out. It's a long season full of ups and downs, so those guys just tying their boots up and going to war for me every night. I wouldn't have won 64 games without them. So if it wasn't for these guys, I wouldn't have won this award."

Shai Gilgeous-Alexander is the fourth player to win NBA MVP, NBA Finals MVP and the scoring title in the same season. ALONZO ADAMS/IMAGN IMAGES

Gilgeous-Alexander earned 83 first-place votes and 939 total points from the panel of voters to run away with the award. Jokic finished second with 10 first-place votes and 634 total points, while Wembanyama had five first-place votes and 569 points.

Earlier in the day, ESPN leaked the news of Gilgeous-Alexander winning the award.

Gilgeous-Alexander averaged 31.1 points per game, shot 55.3% from the field and led the Thunder to 64 wins and the No. 1 seed in the West, even while a steady stream of players around him kept getting hurt. When Oklahoma City needed a basket, he got it. When it needed a stop, he was there to do that, too.

He joined Michael Jordan as the only guards to average 30-plus points with a 50-plus field-goal percentage in four consecutive seasons.

On March 12, Gilgeous-Alexander, 27, broke one of the most untouchable records in basketball history.

He surpassed Wilt Chamberlain's record for consecutive 20-point games, a streak that eventually reached 126 straight. Chamberlain set that mark in January 1963. Nobody had come close to reaching that record until Gilgeous-Alexander erased it that night with his 127th.

Gilgeous-Alexander put up 42 points on 15 of 18 shooting in Game 3 of the Thunder's first-round series against the Phoenix Suns. He closed out the Los Angeles Lakers in four games with his 26th 30-point playoff game in a Thunder uniform.

Gilgeous-Alexander is also the fourth player in NBA history to win MVP, Finals MVP and the scoring title in the same season. He joins Jordan – who the MVP trophy is now named after – Shaquille O'Neal and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar. A native of Ontario, Gilgeous-Alexander is the second Canadian to win the NBA MVP award, following Steve Nash.

Wembanyama gave him a real scare down the stretch. The 22-year-old Spurs center was otherworldly on defense all season and became the youngest defensive player of the year winner in NBA history. He was the first unanimous selection for that award.

Now, Wembanyama and Gilgeous-Alexander will battle it out on the court in the Western Conference finals.

Jokic, as usual, did things that seemed impossible for a human being. He led the league in rebounds, 12.9 per game, and assists, 10.7, averaging a triple-double for the second consecutive season.

Tigers look to turn around 'lost' season

Gabe Lacques
Columnist
USA TODAY

Tigers reliever Kenley Jansen has a 5.02 ERA in 17 games. GREG FIUME/GETTY IMAGES

BALTIMORE – Summer in the D is glorious, as a winter's worth of chill finally gives way to warm days, late sunsets and good times in the Motor City. And when the Detroit Tigers return home to Comerica Park on May 26, the temperature is forecast to hit 82 degrees, a perfect prelude to Michigan's high season.

If only the Tigers could so easily flip the switch on what was supposed to be a similarly sublime season.

Instead, a series of calamitous events, paired with abominable play, has this anticipated juggernaut fighting for survival. The final season for two-time Cy Young Award winner Tarik Skubal before he hits free agency took a jarring turn when the lefty was shelved May 4 with bone chips in his elbow that required surgery.

What happened since has been more dispiriting.

The Tigers lost 16 of their next 18 games, tumbling into the American League Central cellar, creating the impression they collapsed in the wake of their ace's ailment.

More accurately, a handful of ailments, along with a roster not constructed to withstand them, has had a cascading effect. Fifteen Tigers are on the injured list, most in the majors after reliever Brant Hurter landed there with lumbar spine inflammation on May 24.

And the setbacks seem to get more macabre.

Sunday, the club lost for the 21st time in 28 road games when closer Kenley Jansen gave up a two-out, two-strike, three-run ninth inning homer, his third walk-off blast yielded in this young season. The Tigers recovered to win the nightcap and gain a doubleheader split against the Baltimore Orioles, snapping an eight-game losing streak.

And with that, they packed their bags and headed home, admittedly in an odd spot: Just as the city comes to life, the Tigers are forced to adopt an unexpected mantra.

Not dead yet. We swear.

"I want to keep encouraging these guys that No. 1, the season is not lost. The division has not been won," manager A.J. Hinch insisted, on a day the Tigers fell 10½ back of the Cleveland Guardians. "The playoffs have not been named. All the goals you had as a team, eight weeks ago, are still available to you."

It's just awfully hard to see from here.

Detroit is 21-33, with only the Los Angeles Angels sporting an inferior record in the AL, and its 8-21 road record is the worst in the major leagues.

Center fielder Matt Vierling was a member of the 2022 Phillies who started 21-29 and reached the World Series and the '24 Tigers who sold off parts at the trade deadline, were eight games under .500 on Aug. 10 yet rallied for a wild card and reached the AL division series round.

While there's no Knute Rockne speech to be given – the club's performance after Skubal's injury would've made such eyewash even sillier – Vierling says he's made a point to pull teammates aside on the team bus, at dinner, in quiet moments in the clubhouse to keep the road ahead in sight.

Even if the current ride is bumpy.

"It's difficult when you lose one guy, you lose two guys, you lose five or six," says Vierling. "Kind of like a 'Whoa, OK.' The whole dynamic changes with everything. Unfortunately, that did happen to us. But that doesn't have to define our season. It might define what's going on right now, but we still got plenty of time left. Miss those guys a ton, and I know when they're back, they're really gonna help us."

Yet the pain has yet to abate.

'It's been awful'

Gleyber Torres was an All-Star last year, and while his final numbers weren't gaudy, his presence in the Tigers lineup balanced their offensive diet.

He had posted a .389 on-base percentage through 32 games this year when, two days before Skubal's prognosis was revealed, he injured an oblique muscle.

He is nearing recovery, but the Tigers' struggles without him has made it harder to watch.

"It's been awful," Torres said Sunday, now traveling with the team after getting treatment at the club's Florida complex. "Being injured is no fun. At the beginning I thought it would be a short period. I feel frustration because I feel I can't do anything for the team.

"When I was in Florida I see the game but I don't be around the boys. Now I'm here and just feel whatever they feel right now."

"It's awful."

Torres' absence has been felt throughout the lineup. When he occupied the No. 2 spot on most nights, catcher Dillon Dingler typically batted fifth or sixth – and flourished, with a .257/.330/.495 line, a .850 OPS, six homers and 23 RBIs in 29 games.

In the 18 games since Torres' injury? A .194/.279/.400 line, with four homers and eight RBIs.

"Even on his bad days, he's going to find a way to get on base or get a hit. That's very, very stable in the top third of the order," says Hinch of Torres. "Everything changes when you lose someone of Gleyber's presence. And we have to overcome it.

"We need somebody to get hot or get on base a little more to create good things in the absence of someone as talented as Gleyber."

That won't be Kerry Carpenter, sidelined with an AC sprain in his left shoulder, nor veteran Javy Báez, out indefinitely following a grim ankle injury.

Given all the absences, all too often it's fallen to a dazzling rookie to lead them.

Kevin McGonigle: Indispensable rookie

Jumping Kevin McGonigle from Class AA all the way to Detroit wasn't necessarily in the master plan. Yet the manner in which the 21-year-old handled himself in spring training – at the plate and in every facet that makes a big leaguer – left them little choice.

And he's justified their decision almost every day.

McGonigle leads major league rookies – a fine class this season – in hits (55), doubles (12), batting average (.282) and OBP (.386) and is one of five major leaguers with more walks (31) than strikeouts (30).

Still, it has not been an entirely linear elevator to what should be an All-Star Game appearance.

McGonigle has just two extra-base hits in his past 106 plate appearances, his OPS dropping from .963 on April 25 to .796 through Sunday.

Still, his OBP has remained steady in that span – getting on base at a .356 clip even as his slugging has dissipated – and Hinch has admitted the club can't afford to manage his workload in his first 162-game campaign.

On a largely veteran team, he's been objectively its steadiest performer.

"His overall contribution demonstrates that he belongs," says Hinch. "When players – especially hitters – get here, they want to feel that they belong. We want to look at how they respond. Same approach, same demeanor, same reaction to success and failure.

"How he's overcome making mistakes, how he has drawn walks where normal, young hitters are going to be anxious and overswing, he's demonstrated that he belongs as a big leaguer. He's a mainstay in this lineup, and sometimes you have to remind yourself, he's 21 and didn't play Triple-A."

Especially in his ability to meet the moment. Some 250 family and friends made the roughly 90-minute drive from his hometown of Media, Pennsylvania, to see him play at Camden Yards.

He led off the May 22 series opener and clubbed the first pitch for a home run.

"Advanced is one of the perfect words for it. Mature is another really good word for it. His personality – to be 21 and doing that is insane," says Vierling. "His baseball sense and what he's doing on the field is pretty incredible. Every single time he goes up there, I feel like he's going to hit a ball hard, he's going to walk, he's going to work a long at-bat.

"I haven't really seen much like him since I've been in the big leagues."

McGonigle is 52 games into his career and clearly has a decent handle on the cat-and-mouse tango that goes on in the big leagues. The book is out on him, and he has not folded.

McGonigle ranks in the 97th percentile in both chase and whiff percentage, a startling level of discipline for such a young hitter. His compact 5-foot-9, 187-pound frame should only add strength as he gets older.

Yet he's more than holding his own already.

"To be able to compete at the highest level of the game is awesome," McGonigle tells USA TODAY Sports. "I go out every day trying to stay consistent with mindset stuff and trying to help the team win."

While he's arguably been their most reliable player, McGonigle still leans significantly on veteran sounding boards. A big-league indoctrination amid a season gone sideways is far from optimal.

The Tigers' collective woes probably provided the more profound teaching moments.

"The biggest thing they help me with is tell me this is a game of failure. As a team you're going to fail. As a player you're going to fail," says McGonigle. "But the way you stay in this game for a long time is how you respond to that.

"Everyone in here is ready to keep fighting, keep trying to win baseball games, and I think we're going to be in a good spot at the end of the year."

Learning to take a punch

But at some point, they have to start winning.

Sunday, Baltimore's Colton Cowser joined Atlanta's Matt Olson and Cincinnati's Nathaniel Lowe as lefty sluggers with walk-off homers against Jansen, who ranks third all-time with 483 saves. He was stewing after the Game 1 loss, saying he should've "died with my cutter" rather than throw a flaccid two-seam fastball that Cowser drove out to center.

It was the two walks that preceded Cowser's blast that were less forgivable, the sort of carelessness the club cannot afford in these dire straits.

"We just gotta keep climbing that tall mountain," says Jansen, "and get on top. It's one pitch I wish I could've taken back."

Another regret in a season full of them. Yet perhaps the injury report will be kinder soon.

Skubal, thanks to the innovative NanoScope procedure, is returning far sooner than anticipated. He has thrown bullpen sessions and could possibly face hitters next week in Detroit; Justin Verlander, the 42-year-old future Hall of Famer, is in a similar spot in his lengthy return from left hip irritation.

And in Game 2 Sunday, right-hander Troy Melton made his season debut after suffering elbow inflammation during spring training, earning the win with 5⅔ effective innings. Dingler washed away the bad vibes with a first-inning two-run homer. McGonigle contributed a two-run, left-on-left single off a lefty.

"We talk about this game being full of adjustments. Here's a 21-year-old showing you how to do it," says Hinch of McGonigle. "He loves his at-bats. He's locked in his at-bats. And we love it when he's at bat, too."

Yet the Tigers will need this summer to be far more than the continuing saga of the McGonigle Chronicles. The reinforcements will need time to ramp up, even as the club desperately needs wins.

The goal remains not to enjoy the summer warmth, but stick around for the weather to turn again, in autumn, for the third consecutive season.

"We had the biggest punch in the face a few hours before this game," says Hinch after the club salvaged the back half of the doubleheader.

"Our guys just stashed it away and went right back into game mode."
