NBA CONFERENCE SEMIFINALS

Thunder overpower Lakers; Pistons pop Cavs

Lorenzo Reyes
USA TODAY

The back half of the NBA playoff conference semifinals tipped off with another pair of series openers.

In the first game May 5, the No. 1 Pistons built an early lead against the No. 4 Cavaliers, extending it to as many as 18 points, but Detroit needed to fend off a Cleveland rally in the fourth to defend home court, 111-101.

In the nightcap, the No. 1 Thunder continued their quest to repeat with a defensive masterclass at home against the No. 4 Lakers 108-90.

The winners and losers from the games May 5:

Winners

Jared McCain, Cason Wallace and the Thunder bench deliver: Oklahoma City's bench is one of its several strengths, and the group was ready in Game 1. The Thunder bench outscored LA's by a 34-15 margin, which put intense pressure on the Lakers when their starters sat.

Jared McCain led the way with 12 points, but Isaiah Joe chipped in nine and Alex Caruso and Cason Wallce added five points apiece. It's not just offense, however, where this group makes its mark. Wallace and Caruso are excellent defenders, and Wallace – as he has most of the season – was a menace; he swiped three steals and also recorded one block.

So on a night when the Lakers threw bodies at Shai Gilgeous-Alexander, the role players delivered.

Detroit gets to the line: How does a team shoot a worse percentage than its opponent, have only one more field goal, yet win by 10? Get to the free-throw line.

The plan for the Pistons early in the game was clear: attack the paint and put Cavs defenders in compromising positions. The Pistons went to the line 35 times and converted 27 of those for a solid 77.1% from the stripe.

And for all the free throws the Pistons shot, the Cavaliers were on the opposite end, going 15 of 16 (93.8%). That means that, in a 10-point game, Detroit's advantage from the line created a plus-12 edge.

"I want to separate this from the game," Donovan Mitchell told reporters after the loss. "The free-throw disparity is not why we lost tonight – I want to make sure I say that, but I don't know, I'm trying to get downhill.

"A friend of mine (Jaylen Brown) got fined for talking about flopping, so I'm not going to try to double down, but, like, I feel like that's what I've got to do at this point. I'm trying to get downhill, get to the bucket and sometimes people are in my way and I'm trying to fight through contact and I'm not getting these calls."

Pistons turn turnovers into points: The other reason Detroit launched massive runs was because it turned defense into offense. Detroit's perimeter players smothered Cleveland's guards, jumping passing lanes and forcing tough passes in pick-and-roll actions. That flustered the Cavs and led to easy Pistons points in transition.

The Pistons forced 19 turnovers (compared to only 11 committed), which led to a 31-16 edge in points off turnovers.

Not surprisingly, Detroit also sprinted to a 15-6 advantage in fast-break points.

The Pistons find balance: They'll still want more offense out of Jalen Duren (11 points on 4 of 11 shooting), but the Pistons didn't need to rely entirely on Cade Cunningham. And, for Detroit, that's a recipe for success.

Tobias Harris (20 points) continued his hot start to the playoffs, Duncan Robinson (19) drained 5 3-pointers and Daniss Jenkins (12) provided a spark off the bench.

Losers

Austin Reaves: Essentially, with Dončić out, the Lakers need to play as close to perfect hoops as possible to have a chance against the defending champs. Austin Reaves is playing in just his third game since returning from an oblique injury, so some initial struggles are to be expected. Los Angeles, however, cannot afford that.

Reaves was harassed by Oklahoma City's perimeter defense and he shot just 3 of 16 from the field, finishing with only eight points.

One issue Reaves may face in this series is the size and length of the Thunder defenders. Whether it was Shai Gilgeous-Alexander, Cason Wallace, Luguentz Dort, Alex Caruso – all excellent defenders in their own right – their physicality made it tough for Reaves all night long.

Cavaliers' James Harden and Donovan Mitchell: Simply put: There's no way the Cavaliers will have a chance in this series if their top two scorers struggle through three quarters the way they did May 5. Mitchell showed some promise in the first half, scoring 14 points on 6 of 11 shooting. Yet he scored only three in the third quarter.

The night for Harden was even worse. After averaging 23.6 points per game in the regular season, Harden had committed more turnovers (five) through three quarters than he had made field goals (two).

The pair did pick it up in the fourth to combine for 19 points, but playing from behind is a tough task against Detroit.

Jarrett Allen's early fouls cost Cavs: He was, arguably, the biggest reason why Cleveland topped the Toronto Raptors in Game 7 in the first round. Allen was a force May 3, scoring 22 points and hauling in 19 rebounds, eight of which were offensive.

In Game 1 of the semifinals it was a different story. The Pistons went right at Allen in the first quarter, drawing three early fouls on him in the first 5:58 of the game. That took him out of the game completely, and he finished the night with just two points and three rebounds in 18:22 on the floor.

Jarred Vanderbilt injury worsens Lakers' tough luck: It's bad enough that Luka Dončić (left hamstring strain) remains out and may miss the entire Eastern semifinals against the Thunder, but things got worse for Los Angeles.

Backup forward Jarred Vanderbilt suffered a right hand injury when his fingers swiped against the left side of the backboard as he attempted to block a shot. The NBC broadcast reported the injury was "gruesome" and indicated that Lakers trainers had to put a towel over it to conceal the injury. The Lakers ruled him out for the rest of the game.

Wylie, and 2026 projected starters S Kenny Woseley Jr. and DE Mylachi Williams – followed Franklin to Virginia Tech.

Grunkemeyer, like all quarterbacks, is the key. He got his chance when Allar sustained a season-ending injury and completed nearly 70% of his passes for 1,339 yards and eight touchdowns. So if you're going to dream at Virginia Tech, dream big.

It's not so much Grunkemeyer's numbers in his first season as a starter, as it is what happened in early November against eventual national champion Indiana. A moment where Indiana quarterback Fernando Mendoza's remarkable, last-minute, game-winning touchdown pass in Happy Valley kept the Hoosier's unbeaten season alive.

Grunkemeyer outplayed Mendoza that day, then won his last four starts of the season – including a bowl win over Clemson. Grunkemeyer didn't throw an interception over the final four games of the season.

But what would've been the biggest upset of the season was simply another side note to the untethering of the program in an all-in season. From everything that could go right prior to the beginning of the season, to everything that could go wrong once the heavy lifting began in late September.

"The upgrade in NIL needed to be done, considering how NIL was being used before (2025)," Grunkemeyer said. "But then that comes with expectations, and as players, we have to do our part. Players should be getting paid, and the one thing (Franklin) does a really good job of is you wouldn't know who is getting paid by the standard he sets and the culture we have."

Not long ago, Franklin and his wife, Fumi, vacationed in The Bahamas to decompress from yet another grind of a football season. As he was walking through the lobby at the resort, Franklin ran into Amani Oruwariye, an overlooked cornerback recruit from his first recruiting class at Penn State.

It was Vanderbilt, Boston College and Cincinnati showing interest in Oruwariye more than a decade ago, and that's about it. So when Franklin left Vanderbilt for Penn State, he took Oruwariye – an unranked national recruit in the 247Sports composite, and 33rd best at his position – to Happy Valley and turned him into an All-Big Ten player.

Oruwariye has played six seasons in the NFL and is currently a backup for the Baltimore Ravens. He's the story Franklin has sold to every player on the Virginia Tech roster. To the high school recruits who decommitted from Penn State and signed with Virginia Tech, to the Penn State players who followed Franklin to Blacksburg, to critical Hokies players who were kept in the fold from Babcock's commitment to financial support.

You want to play football and get to the NFL? We want you here, and we'll get you there. There's a track record.

Besides, everybody loves to be wanted. And paid.

"It's kind of an interesting parallel," Franklin says. "The business model has changed, and you better be bold and aggressive under the new model. You better embrace it, and you better go after it. You can't sit and hope for the best."

Even when you have $49 million reasons to do just that.

NFL

Making 272-game schedule not easy

Chris Bumbaca
USA TODAY

When it comes to corridors of power and rooms in which negotiations of outsized importance are conducted, midtown Manhattan has several. The "Val Pinchbeck Room" inside NFL headquarters might be the most impactful for the American psyche, though.

Named after the former NFL executive who constructed the regular-season schedule by hand on a cork board, the Pinchbeck room is where league executives still hunker down to produce the 272-game itinerary for the upcoming campaign.

Technology, the addition of broadcast – ahem, streaming – partners and a 17th game have changed the process over the years. With the 2026 schedule release set for May 14, here is a look at how the NFL makes its annual schedule.

How is the NFL schedule made?

All teams play 17 games and have one bye week, giving the league 272 matchups to produce. Opponents are determined by the end of the previous season. The order is what makes creating the NFL schedule an undertaking.

Teams alternate seasons in which they host nine regular-season games and one preseason game, or eight regular-season games and two preseason games. The NFC will have nine regular-season home games in 2026.

There are several restrictions within each schedule. For example, the Seattle Seahawks will have to play the domestic opener before the first Sunday of the season. There are nine international games slated for 2026, with those matchups having designated home teams.

The schedule makers must also work around events previously scheduled in (or near) NFL stadiums – from playing surface questions after a concert to traffic due to a holiday parade. The league begins collecting information from the clubs in January about these events.

Partnering with Amazon Web Services (AWS), the NFL's thousands of cloud-based computers come up with thousands of schedule scenarios. Then it's up to the league to figure it out.

Who makes the schedule?

A handful of individuals are responsible for taking what the computer gives them and figuring out the most ideal circumstance for the 32 teams, the league office and the fans. Those people are:

- Hans Schroeder, executive vice president of media distribution.
- Michael North, vice president of broadcasting planning.
- Onnie Bose, vice president of broadcast operations.
- Charlotte Carey, director of broadcasting.

Longtime schedule supervisor Howard Katz retired after the 2025 schedule was released.

How are the opponents determined?

Each team plays the other 31 over a four-year span, which becomes a reality thanks to a lengthy checklist. Here is how each team's opponents are set:

- Six games against the three other teams in the division – two games per team, one at home and one on the road.
- Four games against teams from a division within its conference – two games at home and two on the road (the NFC South plays the entire NFC North in 2026, for example).
- Four games against teams from a division in the other conference – two games at home and two on the road (the NFC South plays the entire AFC North in 2026, for example).
- Two games against teams from the two remaining divisions in its own conference – one game at home and one on the road. Matchups are based on division ranking from the previous season (the third-place team from the NFC North plays the third-place team from the NFC South, for example).
- The 17th game is an additional game against a nonconference opponent from a division that the team is not scheduled to play. Matchups are based on division ranking from the previous season.

Legge to attempt Indy 500, Cup 600 double

Mitchell Northam
USA TODAY

There's not much Katherine Legge hasn't done in a motorsports career that spans nearly three decades.

She's raced Ferraris in Bahrain and Audis in Germany. She's driven in the A1 Grand Prix, Formula E and the IMSA SportsCar Championship.

And she's raced in the Indianapolis 500 and in the NASCAR Cup Series.

Later this month, the 45-year-old native of England is going to try to do both on the same day.

Legge will be the first woman to attempt "the double" – racing in the Indy 500 and Charlotte's Coca-Cola 600 – on May 24. She confirmed her plans to USA TODAY Sports in an exclusive interview this week.

"It's an exciting time," Legge told USA TODAY Sports. "It's another groundbreaking thing that I can showcase to the world really that, if you set your mind to things, you can do anything, and you can do things that maybe you never even dreamt of before."

Sponsoring her cars in both events will be e.l.f. Cosmetics, which was the first beauty brand to be a sponsor in motorsports when they began partnering with Legge a few years ago.

"They've changed the face of racing for me," Legge said of e.l.f. "This is really special, because I never felt like you can be authentically you as a woman in racing and be successful. I was always trying to just fit in. Typically, race car sponsors and partners don't necessarily speak to the women. It makes things like doing the double possible for me, because they believe in me."

Legge will pilot the No. 11 Chevrolet for HMD Motorsports with AJ Foyt Racing in the Indy 500, then get behind the wheel of the No. 78 Chevrolet for Live Fast Motorsports in Charlotte.

She began exploring the possibility of attempting the double a few years ago.

"E.l.f. always wants to do the groundbreaking, newsworthy, big, cool things, right? They want to be disruptive," Legge said.

"Last year is when we really started planning and figured out how to go through all the corporate channels. Because I wasn't a NASCAR Cup driver at that time, you have to do a bunch of races to get licensed before they'll let you (race superspeedways). Then we worked really hard to get the right partners and the right people behind us."

Katherine Legge waves to fans prior to the NASCAR Cup Series Go Bowling at The Glen at Watkins Glen International on May 10. SEAN GARDNER/GETTY IMAGES

Should Legge qualify for both races, she will be the sixth driver in the history of motorsports to try the double. John Andretti was the first in 1996, Robby Gordon tried five times, Tony Stewart twice, Kurt Busch in 2014 and most recently Kyle Larson in 2024 and 2025.

Of the previous five drivers, Stewart was the most successful, placing sixth at Indy and third in Charlotte in 2001.

It's one of the most demanding tests of endurance and skill in all of motorsports, as drivers attempting the double try to cover more than 1,100 miles in one day with little recovery time between the two races.

"It requires a level of endurance and precision that very few in history have pursued," Legge said. "I don't know whether that makes me crazy or not for wanting to do it."

But challenges of stamina aren't new to Legge. She was the first woman to compete in the Rolex 24 at Daytona, and she's also driven in the 24 Hours of Le Mans and the 12 Hours of Sebring.

This will be the fifth time Legge has raced in the Indy 500 and she's the only woman in the field this year. Her best finish is 22nd and she holds the record for the fastest qualifying time by a woman at the Indy 500.

"Especially on the Indy 500 side, I feel like we have a great team and a car that is capable of finishing well," Legge said.

Legge made her NASCAR Cup Series debut last season, becoming the first woman to race in the series since 2018. Charlotte will mark the ninth Cup race she's competed in, with her best finish coming last year at the Brickyard 400 at Indy where she placed 17th.

In addition to the endurance challenges of attempting the double, there are also logistical hurdles Legge will have to manage. The Indy 500 begins at 12:45 p.m. ET and the Coca-Cola 600 green flag drops at 6 p.m. She'll have to take a helicopter from Indianapolis Motor Speedway to the airport where she'll take a flight to Charlotte, North Carolina, then helicopter to Charlotte Motor Speedway after landing. Legge will eat and hydrate on the plane and get an IV for extra electrolytes.

She'll go back and forth the day before, too. That Saturday, she has to attend the driver's meeting in Indianapolis before going to Charlotte to qualify for the NASCAR race.

"It's meticulously organized down to the minute. I just have to turn left a bunch of times that day," Legge said. "Hopefully there's no weather issues. We'll be all over the place."

If there's a weather delay or any other problems that keep Legge from reaching Charlotte on time, her team will have a backup driver ready to take the green flag and start the race.

Legge's historical attempt at the double also comes 50 years after Janet Guthrie knocked down barriers in motorsports. She was the first woman to complete practice laps at the Indianapolis 500 but failed to qualify for that year's race.

Instead of throwing in the towel, Guthrie quickly pivoted to NASCAR, traveled to Charlotte and qualified for the World 600. She finished 15th in the race and was the first woman to compete in the Cup Series on a superspeedway track. The next year, Guthrie became the first woman to compete in the Indy 500 and Daytona 500.

It's Legge's hope her attempt at the double will inspire more young women to get into motorsports. Between Danica Patrick's last NASCAR Cup race and Legge's debut, more than seven years passed where there wasn't a woman who competed at that level.

She's worried that NASCAR will endure another drought without women at the Cup level.

"It seems like there's nobody waiting in the wings ready to take on that mantra," Legge said. "How many years out are we from having the next me? There's a couple of girls in the Truck Series that I don't think have what it takes to get there. We need to develop the next generation so that I can hand over the baton, so to say. But unfortunately, there seems to be this big gap these days. And it's on the IndyCar side, the open-wheel side and on the NASCAR side."

Legge mentioned Lanie Buice as a driver who has shown promise in the ARCA Menards Series. The 19-year-old finished fifth at Kansas this season, but the road to NASCAR's top level is a long one.

"That's probably four or five years away, if we're being realistic. And she's just one, you know?" Legge said. "We need like five or six of them. There's hundreds of guy drivers who are good and only a handful will make it. It's just a numbers game. We just need to increase the interest and the accessibility and the visibility and showcase female talent so that they can see it's possible.

"You know, to be it, you have to see it."

Public Notices

Public Notices are a permanent and independent record of government and court actions. These include state and local government meetings, rule making, available contracts, zoning changes, and many more, as required by law. In addition, parties to some court proceedings, such as foreclosures, probate, and estate actions are required to publish notices to ensure notification of affected parties, as well as the general public. These notices also alert business owners, large and small, to potential government contractual jobs, helping to ensure economic activity across a level playing field. Public notices have existed to ensure transparency in all levels of government since the founding of the United States.

State and local notices are published in Maine newspapers and are also recorded at mainenotices.com, where anyone can browse or search notices, and sign up to receive email alerts when relevant notices appear.
