Best free agents still on market after draft

Tom Viera
USA TODAY

Jauan Jennings was San Francisco's top WR in targets (90), receptions (55) and yards (643) in 2025. KYLE TERADA/IMAGN IMAGES

NFL free agency kicked off at the start of the new league year back in early March, and the list of the best NFL free agents available has dwindled since.

The offseason allows all 32 NFL teams to return to a level playing field, and we witnessed that again during the draft, as every franchise searches for ways to contend.

However, constructing a roster doesn't end after the draft. There are still dozens of notable players in free agency looking to sign who could be key contributors for teams in 2026.

Veteran offensive stars like wide receiver Mike Evans and running back Kenneth Walker III have agreed to terms for 2026 and beyond. However, plenty of free agents remain, including several quality defenders who could be difference-makers. We've seen quarterbacks Malik Willis, Kyler Murray, Kirk Cousins and Tua Tagovailoa agree to contracts with new teams, but who is the best remaining free agent quarterback available?

Here are the top 10 remaining players available in free agency among all position as of April 26:

1. WR Jauan Jennings (Previous team: 49ers) | Age at start of 2026 season: 29

Jennings entered free agency among the top wide receivers available. He's a do-it-all type of player. He's a willing blocker and finished in the top four with 18 contested catches in 2025. He's a big-bodied receiver standing at 6-3, and despite missing time with injuries, he led the 49ers in receiving touchdowns and was San Francisco's top wide receiver in targets (90), receptions (55) and yards (643).

2. QB Aaron Rodgers (Previous team: Steelers) | Age at start of 2026 season: 42

The four-time MVP showed he can still sling it at a high level. He led the Steelers to an AFC North title but his lack of mobility at the age of 42 was evident. He threw 24 touchdown passes and only seven interceptions while ranking 16th in completion percentage (65.7%) and 23rd in QBR (44.4).

Any team acquiring Rodgers would be on a timeline with the 42-year-old signal-caller. Rodgers is the NFL's oldest player, but his vision, accuracy and arm talent remain – though he's no longer the MVP he once was. If Rodgers plays a 22nd season, the Steelers could benefit since his old coach, Mike McCarthy, was hired for the same role.

3. LT Taylor Decker (Previous team: Lions) | Age at start of 2026 season: 33

Decker requested and was granted his release after a decade in Detroit. He's been an anchor along the line since entering the league in 2016. Last season, he allowed two sacks in 551 pass-blocking snaps. Before the 2025 season, he considered retirement due to shoulder surgery, but he brings playoff experience and intangibles at a premium position.

4. DE/OLB Joey Bosa (Previous team: Bills) | Age at start of 2026 season: 31

The 2016 third overall pick has been selected to five Pro Bowls throughout his decade in the league and earned Defensive Rookie of the Year honors in 2016. Bosa spent the 2025 season with the Buffalo Bills, starting 15 games. He forced five fumbles, recorded five sacks, 54 QB pressures and 16 quarterback hits – the most since his 2021 season with the Chargers. The soon-to-be 31-year-old is a situational rusher who can still win at the line of scrimmage.

5. LB Bobby Wagner (Previous team: Commanders) | Age at start of 2026 season: 36

Wagner is in the latter stage of his career but remains a capable starter in the middle of any defense. Wagner will enter the 2026 season at 36 years old, and his pass coverage ability has dropped off in recent years, but he's still a tackling machine.

In 2025, he was the only linebacker to exceed 90.0 grade in run defense (90.3), pass rushing (92.4) and tackling (90.5), per Pro Football Focus (PFF). The future Hall of Famer would be a valuable addition to any locker room.

6. WR Stefon Diggs (Previous team: Patriots) | Age at start of 2026 season: 33

Diggs is a veteran and former All-Pro coming off a comeback season after tearing his ACL in Week 8 in 2024. He will turn 33 next season. He's been one of the most reliable receivers over the last decade, finishing with over 1,000 receiving yards in seven straight healthy seasons. He was released by New England before the start of free agency.

He has finished in the top 25 in PFF overall grade in every season and led the Patriots with 85 receptions and 1,013 receiving yards.

If not for his pending legal matter, teams may be more aggressive in pursuing the four-time Pro Bowler.

7. WR Deebo Samuel (Previous team: Commanders) | Age at start of 2026 season: 30

Samuel is a player some would consider at the top of the list, but the receiver will be 30 in June, and his role in Kliff Kingsbury's offense never gained traction. Washington traded for Samuel before the 2025 season, but the veteran wideout didn't have much impact. Samuel has made a career of using his physical tools to create after the catch, but Father Time is undefeated.

Still, he offers a veteran presence, versatility and consistency for a team searching for a proven player to add to their receiving room.

8. DE/OLB Jadeveon Clowney (Previous team: Cowboys) | Age at start of 2026 season: 33

The former No. 1 overall pick will be entering his 13th season. Clowney totaled 8.5 sacks and 32 pressures last season in 13 games with Dallas. In 2025, only Micah Parsons and Will Anderson Jr. had a higher pressure rate than Clowney's 19.1%. He ranked 15th in pass-rush win rate. Although he is no longer a game-wrecker, he will be a strong rotational pass-rusher for any contender.

9. CB Rasul Douglas (Previous team: Dolphins) | Age at start of 2026 season: 31

The veteran cornerback was a tertiary player in Buffalo in 2024 and then enjoyed a solid season with the Miami Dolphins in 2025, signing a one-year deal in free agency. Douglas is an impact player who is physical on the perimeter. He posted the fifth-highest coverage grade among cornerbacks from 2021 to 2023, per PFF. He earned a 72.7 overall PFF defensive grade in 2025, ranking 21st among 114 qualified cornerbacks. He would bring a veteran presence and depth to any secondary.

10. TE David Njoku (Previous team: Browns) | Age at start of 2026 season: 30

Njoku is known for his size and athleticism during his nine seasons in Cleveland. He's dealt with injuries over the last two seasons, missing a total of 11 games. However, he is an elite red zone threat and a solid blocker.

Sun fans bracing for a 'bitter' loss of team

Heather Burns
USA TODAY

UNCASVILLE, CT – Connecticut Sun fans stood in long lines for autographs from their favorite players at the WNBA team's annual open practice and meet-and-greet to kick off the 2026 season at Mohegan Sun arena in late April.

Nearly 1,500 season ticket holders collected signatures from the newest roster members – legendary center Brittney Griner and UCLA national champions Gianna Kneepkens and Charlisse Leger-Walker – and old favorites – UConn grads Aaliyah Edwards and Olivia Nelson-Ododa – alike.

The fans know there won't be many more opportunities like this after the Mohegan Tribe ownership group announced March 30 it would sell the Sun to Houston Rockets owner Tilman Fertitta. While the reported $300 million sale still has to be ratified by the WNBA board of governors, it's a foregone conclusion Fertitta will move the franchise to Houston ahead of the 2027 season.

"It's disappointing because we have a history here," said Myra Amsden, a season ticket holder from Waterford, Connecticut, who has been coming to games for 20 years.

"The Sun were really robbed it from the tribe. There's too many things that are not right about this whole thing. And it's embarrassing, I think, for the WNBA."

The tribe had agreed to sell to former Celtics minority owner Steve Pagliuca for $325 million in July 2025. He had planned to move the team to Boston. Milwaukee Bucks owner Marc Lasry matched the $325 million and wanted to relocate the team to Hartford. The WNBA said no to both proposals, saying neither group made a bid for expansion in the last round so they were not eligible to buy the Sun.

The WNBA announced expansion to Cleveland (2028), Detroit (2029) and Philadelphia (2030) in July 2025. At the time, Commissioner Cathy Engelbert made it clear the league wanted to return to Houston sooner than later.

"One of those I wanted to shout out because they have such a strong history in this league, and they're a great ownership group – Houston. … That's the one we have our eye on," Engelbert said at the time. "Tilman (Fertitta) has been a great supporter of the WNBA, and we'll stay tuned on that.

"Houston would be up next for sure. There might be opportunities there."

The opportunity comes at the expense of Sun fans. The Mohegan Tribe bought the franchise, formerly the Orlando Miracle, in 2003 for $10 million. They have played in Connecticut for 24 seasons.

Mike Greer and his wife, Asia, have had season tickets for two years but have been coming to games for much longer. "I feel like a sore loser," said Greer, whose 5-year-old daughter, Autumn, was waiting in line with him for autographs. "I've been mad. … It's not even bittersweet. It's just bitter. There's no silver lining."

Asia Greer added: "It doesn't seem like a good business deal as the league is appreciating. The WNBA just did whatever they wanted. It's really sad how they snatched the team away."

Jenny Trerice has been coming to Sun games since she was 15, "when they first existed." She reminisced about the many players – from Nykesha Sales and Lindsey Whalen to DeWanna Bonner and Alyssa Thomas – who she's cheered for over the years.

"For it to be such a big basketball place and for them to say, 'We'll be gone in less than a year,' " Trerice said. "It shocked me, but it didn't. It definitely more hurt me than anything … it seems like almost no loyalty."

Trerice attends games with her mom, Jennifer, who lamented the loss of the team and the opportunity to spend time with her daughter.

"This is like some mom-kid bonding time that's gonna be taken away," Jennifer said. "I cherish it."

Connecticut calls itself the basketball capital of the world, thanks to 18 national championships combined between the UConn men's and women's basketball teams. The Sun never won a title but did make the playoffs 17 times and WNBA Finals four times in their history.

"Connecticut deserves to have a team, because we're a proven (place) where people will support women's basketball," UConn coach Geno Auriemma said in March. "So them now moving, I think it leaves a void. They had a great fan base, and it wasn't only UConn fans or fans only went when UConn players came.

"They did a great job of establishing their own fan base, and it was a rabid fan base that provided a lot of energy and a lot of passion for those teams."

As season ticket holders stood for up to a half an hour to meet their favorite player, longtime season ticket holder Angel Earle said the event, where you "used to be able to get every player" has grown so much now you have to pick three or four players to target. Seeing the fan base grow but being unable to keep the Sun in Connecticut is "frustrating."

Earle, who is well-known among the Connecticut fans for sitting courtside in colorful costumes and leading cheers, said she will continue to root for the W but doesn't look forward to having to take a road trip to see a game live.

"The New York Liberty will be the closest (WNBA team) but, I think before I start traveling all that way, I'll probably move back to Jersey first," Earle said.

"When I am retired … maybe I'll move to Texas (to support the Houston Comets). Who knows?"

Tarik Skubal's loss could be mitigated if Jack Flaherty, left, pitches better and Justin Verlander, right, returns from injury. JUNFU HAN/DETROIT FREE PRESS

With Skubal out, not all lost for Tigers in AL race

Gabe Lacques
USA TODAY

Start with this: There's no replacing Tarik Skubal.

The Detroit Tigers are well aware there's no ready-made replacement for the reigning two-time Cy Young Award winner. But that doesn't mean they have to cash in their chances at winning their first American League pennant since 2012 – or their first World Series title since 1984.

Detroit suffered a significant blow when manager A.J. Hinch revealed Skubal will have elbow surgery to remove loose bodies from his throwing arm, a procedure that will sideline him into the second half – and probably right up to the Aug. 3 trading deadline, when the club will assess its spot in the standings and decide whether to add or subtract from its roster.

At 18-18, the Tigers are in a five-team dogfight in the AL Central, one that figures to come down to Detroit, Cleveland and perhaps Kansas City. And with nine AL teams within four games of .500, the wild-card spot should be even more of a taffy pull.

The ramifications of Skubal's injury and how the Tigers may bounce back.

Pitching chaos is a given in Detroit, even with Tarik Skubal

Kind of appropriate that on the day Skubal's surgery was announced, Hinch anointed reliever Tyler Holton the starting pitcher for their May 4 game against visiting Boston.

"Second bullpen game in a row," Hinch noted.

"Pitching chaos" has been a way of life in Detroit since the end of the 2024 season, when the Tigers rode Skubal and a menagerie of mound men to a startling late-season rally for a wild-card spot and a playoff sweep of Houston before losing a stirring five-game AL division series to Cleveland.

In the years since, the Tigers have done their level best to avoid that scenario, re-signing Jack Flaherty, coaxing future Hall of Famer Justin Verlander back to the D and investing $115 million in lefty Framber Valdez.

But just when it looked like they were out … the openers are back in.

So it goes when 10 pitchers are on the injured list, including bona fide starters Verlander, 2025 All-Star Casey Mize, Tommy John-rehabbing youngster Jackson Jobe and now Skubal. Yet Hinch is really, really good at orchestrating the pitching strategy, even if they may not know who's starting the next game until everyone shows up the following day.

So bring on the Holtons and Brant Hurters and Brenan Hanifees and Ty Maddens.

Valdez must be a rock

The dude has pitched the Astros to a World Series title, is almost a lock for 180-200 innings a year and is hard to drive from a game. Now Valdez, signed to be a future anchor once Skubal leaves via free agency, must be their rock, now.

So far, Valdez has been, well, fine.

He's completed at least six innings in five of his seven starts, and uncoincidentally, the Tigers are 5-2 when he takes the mound. A .714 winning percentage will win a lot of divisions.

Valdez is not a threat to throw a no-hitter every time out like Skubal is. Yet he almost always keeps you in games, and that's a bargain at $115 million. If he can maintain, the Tigers should be fine.

Flaherty must find the strike zone

With a 5.90 ERA through seven starts, Jack Flaherty knows he must be better. Says he's losing sleep over his performance. And realizes that a 17.7% walk rate and a 46.3% hard-hit percentage is a lethal combination.

Look at it like this: The Tigers are right at .500, and Flaherty couldn't be much worse. With the bullpen arms stretched thin thanks to the above chaos, Flaherty will have to give them more than four innings pitched, his average outing thus far.

Wounded arms claw back from IL

GM Scott Harris knew he was signing a 43-year-old when he brought Justin Verlander back to Detroit. Thirty starts was probably never going to be reality.

And the club has nursed Verlander along in his return from hip inflammation, which sidelined him in April. Yet Verlander hasn't graduated beyond numerous bullpen sessions, with vague plans beyond that after Hinch acknowledged the recovery was going "slower than I think he or we anticipated."

Meanwhile, Casey Mize, second only to Skubal in his effectiveness this season, hit the IL last week with a right adductor strain. A vexing injury, and a discouraging prognosis after Mize initially said his groin tightness didn't seem too serious.

The Tigers have to get Mize's recovery right the first time, regardless of the length of his absence. Even if it's tough to shelve a 2.90 ERA.

Skubal returns with a vengeance

Let's not forget: Skubal is a beast.

The man with the nastiest fastball-changeup combo in the majors will surely attack his rehab and recovery with ferocity.

No, Skubal won't be able to speedrun his return. But if he at least hits the early part of the timeline and can work back up to something resembling full strength by mid-August, the Tigers will be well-armed for the stretch run and potentially the playoffs.

It's on Hinch and club president Scott Harris to ensure they're well-positioned when that time comes.
