Stricker confident with 6 Ryder Cup rookies

Steve DiMeglio

Golfweek | USA TODAY Network

Is it time to start worrying about the U.S. Ryder Cup team?

After all, in about two weeks, the team that has lost to Europe in nine of the last 12 matches will arrive at Whistling Straits in Wisconsin with half the team making their debuts.

Seriously? The Ryder Cup is where grown men are shaken to their core under the enormous weight of playing for country, flag, team and captain. It's three days when heads spin, hands shake and hearts race. And the U.S. is going in with six players who've never dealt with anything like the Ryder Cup? "Captain America" Patrick Reed and Webb Simpson were passed over for rookies?

Really? Well, U.S. captain Steve Stricker isn't worried.

Throughout a one-hour news conference Wednesday from Whistling Straits, Stricker confidently ticked off reason after reason that the red, white and blue newbies will be a strength and not a hindrance.

Look at the six, Stricker said in so many, many words. Four of his captain's picks announced Wednesday will make their debut — Xander Schauffele, Daniel Berger, Harris English and Scottie Scheffler. Only Schauffele and Scheffler didn't win in the just concluded season, but Schauffele won the gold medal in the Tokyo Olympics and Scheffler, whose worst finish in his six starts in major championships is a tie for 19th, took down world No. 1 Jon Rahm and Ian Poulter en route to his runner-up finish in the World Golf Championships-Dell Technologies Match Play in March.

Xander Schauffele didn't win a 2020-21 PGA Tour event but won Olympic gold. SCOTT TAETSCH/USA TODAY SPORTS

The other two rookies who automatically qualified are Collin Morikawa, who has two majors on his resume, and Patrick Cantlay, who just won the FedExCup and led the PGA Tour with four wins in the "super" 2020-21 season.

The six rookies join automatic qualifiers Dustin Johnson, Justin Thomas, Bryson DeChambeau and Brooks Koepka and the two other captain's picks, Tony Finau and Jordan Spieth.

The dozen have made a mere 12 appearances in the Ryder Cup. The oldest player is Johnson at 37. Only Johnson and Spieth have played in more than two editions of the Ryder Cup. Where's the experience? Well, again, Stricker isn't worried.

The 12 are uber talented: Eight are in the top 10 in the world and Scheffler is the lowest ranked at 21st. On paper, the U.S. is loaded. But as we see so often, the game isn't played on paper. It will be played on the rugged links-style Straits Course hard by Lake Michigan that is long and demands length off the tee, strong ball-striking skills and superior shot-shaping ability. Which is just fine with Stricker.

"We are looking to the best players to perform here at Whistling Straits, and these six guys that we picked, we feel like they fit Whistling Straits to a T," said Stricker, who consulted his vice captains, the six automatic qualifiers and his analytical team before making his final decision on his picks.

"We have done some analysis of rookies since 2008, and U.S. rookies are a 40-29-17 record in Ryder Cup. So rookies fare very well in this type of format, and we're excited to have these rookies. Some of them aren't really rookies. They have played in past Presidents Cup teams. Some of these guys have match play competition under their belt.

"They bring in an excitement level that is unmatched, and they are eager, they are willing to learn. (Rookies) just come here with eyes wide open and a 'put me in Coach' kind of attitude. So it's refreshing. It's great to see."

It certainly was in 2008 when Stricker was one of six rookies at Valhalla Golf Club in Kentucky when the U.S. thumped Europe.

And all 12 players are versatile, giving Stricker a bevy of options to fill out his foursomes and four-balls lineups. Although it's obvious he has two teams already in mind: Spieth and Thomas, who provided one of the few bright spots in Europe's pasting of the U.S. in Paris in 2018 by going 3-1 as a team, and Cantlay and Schauffele, who were 2-0-2 as a team in the 2019 Presidents Cup.

And the 12 are eager.

Stricker said all of his troops and their caddies will be at Whistling Straits this Sunday and Monday for practice rounds, team bonding and to just get comfortable with the surroundings.

"My message from Day 1 has been to try to outprepare the other team," Stricker said. "Let's get in as much practice as we can here. Maybe take a little bit of the stress of Ryder Cup week off our plates by getting our work done now earlier than Ryder Cup week and get some rest that week.

"We'll go out, have a good time, get to learn the course a little bit. Work on some pairings during that time."

Stricker is confident the rookies won't let the USA down.

The rookies are just as confident.

"I'm excited to run with all these boys," Schauffele said. "By definition, yes, it's a new environment. It's something I haven't done, which is to compete in a Ryder Cup. Do I mentally feel like one? No. I've been playing for quite some time, and it's a dream to play in a Ryder Cup, and I think whatever rookie feelings I have will quickly go away with all my fellow teammates pushing me along."

One last thing: The six rookies have no scar tissue.

"I've been a rookie and had success in the event, and all these guys have contended in the biggest tournaments in the world and won the biggest tournaments in the world," Spieth said.

"I think they are going to have a blast and really hope to be on that 2016 side of things where Phil Mickelson is pouring champagne in your mouth while you get to celebrate with all the American fans."

2001 Yankees recall 9/11, lament how apart we are

Josh Peter

USA TODAY

Joe Torre, manager of the Yankees at the time of 9/11, grew rueful this week as the 20th anniversary of the terrorist attacks approached.

Oh, he fondly recalled how the Yankees resumed play against the White Sox in Chicago a week after the Sept. 11 attacks.

"The New York Yankees, you either love them or hate them," Torre told USA TODAY Sports. "There's no middle of the road with the Yankees. And we showed up in Chicago that day to play the White Sox and they had signs and banners, 'We Love New York.'"

It was the same story when the Yankees arrived in Baltimore, and then Tampa Bay, and, in a poignant reflection of national unity, felt like most of the country was rooting for the Yankees as New York's beloved baseball team reached the postseason and ultimately the World Series.

Now Torre looks around America and sees discord.

The attack on the U.S. Capitol. Division over athletes who have protested during the national anthem. Democrats and Republicans regarding each other with more animosity than the Yankees and Red Sox ever did.

"Unfortunately, as a country, we're not wearing the same uniform, it seems," Torre said.

He won four World Series titles as a manager, but none was as memorable as the year he lost one.

That was the 2001 season, when Torre's Yankees won three electric games at Yankee Stadium only to lose the series to the Diamondbacks in Game 7. That team, Torre said, could serve as an important lesson today.

"I know still that success really relies on everybody pulling together and caring for each other," he said. "And I can just tell you, as a baseball manager, you don't have to like each other on a baseball team, but you certainly need to respect each other. And as I say, I had a special group (of players) that maybe didn't go out and socialize together, but when they got on the field, they knew what they needed to do."

In one of the most indelible sports moments in the aftermath of 9/11, President George W. Bush threw out the ceremonial pitch before Game 3 of the World Series at Yankee Stadium. Todd Greene, then a backup catcher for the Yankees, caught the pitch.

But while recalling what he considers the highlight of his career, Greene lamented the state of the country.

"It's just such a shame that we have to have a tragedy like that for our country to be united," he said. "And we're just so divisive now with everything, and it's refreshing to think back how united our country was after such a tragedy occurred."

"We've never been more united as a country than we were for those couple of months after that happened."

With a chuckle, former Yankee Paul O'Neill said it probably became acceptable to hate the Yankees after the 2001 season.

"But at that time, it seemed like everybody was kind of respectful and like rooting for us to get through what was going on in New York," he said. "It was like we were playing for the country."

Fame

passed away: Al Kaline, Tom Seaver, Lou Brock, Bob Gibson, Whitey Ford, Joe Morgan, Phil Niekro, Tommy Lasorda, Don Sutton and Aaron.

Yet reflective of these times, Bench was absent from the ceremonies for the first time since his induction, testing positive for the coronavirus last week despite having been vaccinated. Many of the Hall of Famers on stage, but not all, wore masks. And most of the eldest Hall of Famers, such as Willie Mays, Whitey Herzog, Luis Aparicio, Sandy Koufax, Bill Mazeroski and Brooks Robinson, elected to stay at home instead of risking their health.

Simmons, who had to wait all these years before he was inducted, perhaps delivered the most eloquent speech. He even quoted the Beatles to thank his wife, Maryanne: "In the end, the love you take is equal to the love you make. ... We finally got here sweet-heart."

Walker easily had the most humorous speech, even before he began, wearing a SpongeBob pin on his suit and taking out his cellphone to shoot video of the crowd before speaking his first words. He talked about not knowing the rules of baseball growing up in Canada, telling the story of running behind the pitcher's mound instead of retouching second base on his way back to first base on a fly ball to the outfield that was caught. He talked about going on social media trying to get into the Hall of Fame with a hashtag, "Fergie needs a friend," and turned around and thanked Fergie Jenkins for being the first Canadian into the Hall of Fame. And he joked about those report cards filled with D's and F's.

Simmons thanked those who helped him along the way, including late Padres executives Kevin Towers and Bill Bryk, while also making sure to honor those who courageously paved the way for free agency: Curt Flood, Catfish Hunter, Andy Messersmith and, of course, Marvin Miller.

"Marvin Miller made so much possible for every player," Simmons said. "I could not be more proud to enter this great Hall with this great man."

Don Fehr, former executive director of the players association, delivered a passionate 23-minute speech for the Miller family, with Miller dying in 2012, describing the man who every player will forever be indebted to. "He was easily the most practical person I ever saw," Fehr said. "He was quiet, soft spoken; I never heard him raise his voice except to me once or twice in exasperation. Never to players, owners, fans, media or staff. He was polite, thoughtful, deliberate, fiercely and incredibly intelligent, extraordinarily meticulous, well-prepared, incisive and decisive. The man had an endless reserve of patience."

He talked about Miller's trust toward the players, which they reciprocated. "Baseball was not the same after your tenure as it was before," Fehr said, "it was and is much better for everyone. You brought out the best of us, and you did us proud."

The 2½-hour ceremony ended with Jeter thanking the fans and delivering a message to the active players.

"This is a game that requires sacrifice and dedication, discipline and focus," Jeter said. "It's a game of failure that teaches you teamwork and teaches you humility. One thread with all of us here on stage that we understand is there's no one individual bigger than the game."

"The game goes on. And it goes on because of the great fans we have. So take care of it. Protect it. Respect it. Don't take the time you have to play for granted."

"Remember the most important thing: It's more than just a game. The greatest ever to play in the Hall of Fame family — they're all watching."
